Parker "51"

THEY'RE both true Parker 51's . . . identical in styling, in performance, in fine precision craftsmanship. So take your choice. Perfect for Easter giving—for birthdays and anniversaries.

If you prefer a shorter, more compact writing instrument, then the new demi-size "51" is just the pen for you. It's less than 5 inches in length, so that it clips neatly to a woman's handbag in an upright position. Fits even a man's shallow shirt pocket.

Like the famous regular Parker "51," the jewel-like demi-size offers a wide range of individualized custom points. You choose the point that fits your needs—and helps you write your best.

Remember: for these pens alone, new Parker Superchrome Ink has been created. This remarkable new ink—the most brilliant permanent writing fluid ever created—actually dries as it writes! And only the "51" is designed to use it satisfactorily.

Your Parker dealer will gladly show you both the regular and the new demi-size Parker "51." Choice of distinctive colors. $12.50 and $15.00. Pencils, $5.00 and $7.50. Sets, $17.50 to $80.00. miserable aspects of a cold you know so well.

Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill hosts of these "secondary invaders." Used in time, it may give Nature a helping hand in throwing off the infection. In tests, germs on throat and mouth surfaces were reduced as much as 96.7% fifteen minutes after the Listerine Antiseptic gargle, as much as 80% one hour after.

Bear in mind Listerine Antiseptic's impressive record made in tests over 12 years! Those who gargled with Listerine Antiseptic twice a day had fewer colds and usually milder colds than those who did not gargle . . . and fewer sore throats.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

IF, like the man in the picture, you could isolate yourself from germs spread by other people, you might stand a better chance of avoiding a severe cold this winter.

But since you can't wear a glass dome over your head, it's wise to enlist the aid of the Listerine Antiseptic gargle early and often. Especially so, if you have been in close contact with other people who have colds, or if your feet get wet or cold, or if you have been exposed to sudden changes of temperature.

Such exposure may be all that is necessary to give a foothold to germs called the "secondary invaders." Unless you act quickly these germs may invade the throat tissues to produce many of those

Ford's out Front

ON A TRIP ABROAD

The ace photo team of Miller and Stephens "did" Europe in a new Ford Convertible for Pan American Airways. Here's their story:

"Hoops Inn, our first picture location in England, boasts a thatched roof. Quite different from the roof on our Ford. Ours goes up or down at just the touch of a button!"

"Remember Hannibal? Well, he never crossed the Alps with a 100 horsepower V-8 engine like we did. Our Ford really did its stuff at Chamonix. And our 'King-size' brakes... wonderful!"

"A wedding in Spain, like this one in Lageterra, is strictly a full-color affair, for both bride and groom! Too bad they didn't have a beautiful Ford like ours for their honeymoon trip!"

"Guess again! This picture wasn't made in Holland. It's Portugal! And the windmills run like a breeze—just like our Ford over these Portuguese Plains. Our Ford's beauty stopped traffic wherever we went!"

Listen to the Ford Theater over NBC stations Sunday afternoon 5:00 to 6:00 P.M., E.S.T.

"Good old Galileo! He used the Leaning Tower of Pisa as a 'proving ground' for his theories on acceleration of falling things. Our Ford could have taught him a thing or two about acceleration... uphill acceleration!"

"A Latin textbook was as close as we'd ever come to the Arch of Augustus. It was impressive... but we agreed that no Roman Emperor ever drove through it in a 'chariot' like ours!"

There's a Ford in your future

"There are right ways and wrong ways to scold a child, dear," SAID ELSIE, THE BORDEN COW

"THERE'S ONLY ONE WAY TO scold a child, woman," thundered Elmer, the bull, "and that's good and loud."

"But, darling," gasped Elsie, the Borden Cow, "if you shout at the little angel, you'll scare him—make him unsure of himself and afraid of you."

"No son of Elmer's will ever be afraid," boasted Elmer. "I'll teach him to have confidence in himself."

"First," smiled Elsie, "you'll have to teach him to have confidence in you. That's why you mustn't frighten him when he's naughty, or disobedient, or knocks over his Borden's Milk."

PENNY FOR PENNY your best food buy is milk! Drink plenty of delicious Borden's Milk with meals, between meals, and get extra nourishment into the family's diet with milk dishes!

"What in tarnation's name are you dragging Borden's Milk into this for?" bellowed Elmer.

"Just to illustrate a point," blithely answered Elsie. "To go on—suppose a child does spill his milk over himself, and everything . . . A wise parent doesn't scold."

"What does he do," guffawed Elmer, "feed the kid chicken legs from then on?"

"Don't be silly," said Elsie. "The wise parent gives him more milk. Then he tells the child that if he wants to be big and strong like his daddy, he'll drink every drop of his Borden's Milk. It's teeming with vitamins, minerals, proteins and other good things. And Borden's Milk tastes so glorious even little milk-shy dears fall in love with it."

Cheeses. Now you take that great cheese food, Borden's Chateau.* Its mellow-mild Cheddar flavor sends cheese lovers into ecstasies."

"There's one little dear that's going to be shy an ever-loving husband," threatened Elmer, "if she doesn't forget Borden's."

"You can't scare me, darling," laughed Elsie. "Besides, you'd have something to bellow about if I stopped telling the world about things like Borden's Fine

PACK CONCENTRATED NOURISHMENT into lunch boxes with Borden's Chateau! It slices, spreads, melts be-autifully. Grand for sandwiches, alone or with chopped olives or sliced meats.

-if it's Borden's, it's got to be good!

"I don't want to go into any ecstasy—or any place else," snapped Elmer. "I want us to get back to talking about how to scold a kid."

"And we shall, dear," agreed Elsie, "just as soon as I tell folks they can make wonderfully fluffy omelets with Chateau, and light-as-a-cloud soufflés, and oh-so-good Chateau sauces. You know what I always say—"

"The whole blooming world knows what you always say," groaned Elmer. "But I'm beating you to it this time—if it's Borden's, it's GOT to be good!"

"ONCE YOU LEARN ABOUT BUTYL..."

you'll never want a Rubber inner tube again!"

BUTYL is the brand name of a really amazing new kind of tough, elastic material for inner tubes. During the war, all that could be made went to the armed forces. Since the war Butyl has set a new high in tire performance for America's motorists. Here's why:

BUTYL is actually better than rubber for inner tubes! It holds air ten times better than rubber, stays at correct inflation for months at a time!

CORRECT inflation provides new riding comfort, greater safety, easier steering; helps eliminate both hard riding and car sway.

CORRECT inflation gives tires greater mileage, longer tread life with less sidewall strain.

CORRECT inflation increases gasoline economy—eliminates underinflated-tire "drag."

CORRECT inflation assures you air in the spare at the critical time you may need to use it.

Tubes made of Butyl are easily identified by the prominent blue line on the side. Look for this blue line when you ask your tire dealer for tubes...they come in all brands.

How to get fine steaks every time...

YOU'LL ALWAYS GET FINE BEEF if you buy by a Swift brand name. Right on the meat, the brand name identifies beef selected by Swift experts for tenderness and flavor... the pick of all the vast amounts they see. Swift's Premium, Swift's Select, and Swift's Arrow—those are the three top brands. Look for them... on thrifty cuts or choice ones... whenever you buy beef. Now especially, when every morsel counts, your best buy is beef you can depend on, to the last tender tidbit!

Just look for a Swift brand:
 SWIFTS PREMIUM,
 SWIFTS SELECT or SWIFTS ARROW
right on the meat!

Martha Logan

Swift's Home Economist, tells you

HOW TO GIVE A STEAK A BREAK

EVEN THOSE FINER Swift branded steaks are better for proper broiling: Slash fat along edge in several places to prevent curling. Preheat broiler. Place steak on broiler rack 3" from heat source. A 1½" steak takes 10 min. each side for rare, 12 min. for med., 13 min. for well done.

TURN STEAK CAREFULLY to avoid piercing—tongs are best. To test for done-ness, cut along bone with a sharp knife and peek! Season each side of steak after it is browned, not before. And do serve the steak on a really hot platter. A garnish of rosy onion rings (marinated in pickled beet juice) is an epicurean touch.

NO NEED TO WASTE A BIT of that Swift branded steak. Leftover fat may be cut in bits and used in hash browned potatoes. The flank end (less tender than the other two muscles) can make another meal—sliced fine for meat pie, sandwiches, salad, or meat sauce for a noodle or rice casserole.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

COMMUTERS STRIKE BACK

Sirs:

Hooray for your excellent spread, "New York's Commuters Strike Back" (LIFE, Feb. 2). You left out some good points though, and as an ex-commuter on the Long Island Rail Road I would like to add my sentiments.

When the rates went up last year the officials promised us more trains, better service, cleaner and more up-to-date cars. All we wanted was prompter service, more trains AND A SEAT. We got none of these. . . .

In the summertime if windows and ceiling ventilators are open, you are covered from head to toe with soot by the time you reach your destination.

If you write letters of complaint, they don't go to the source of the trouble. The president himself lives in Philadelphia because he couldn't stand the thought of riding on one of his trains.

STELLA BAILEY

Miami, Fla.

Sirs:

After having been one of those crowded and irate commuters for several years, I can only hope that something good will come of the hearing. At our station there used to be a saying, "A teacup of rain and the Long Island is late."

MRS. WILLIAM T. PARSONS

Norristown, Pa.

Sirs:

. . . You'd think that the Long Island Rail Road was the only lousy commuters' line in the world, considering all the space you gave it. Sure, it's lousy. I used to ride it to Republic and Grumman whenever I visited New York. I finally got to flying small airplanes out to Long Island from New Jersey; it was a lot faster.

But why don't you at least make the pretense of checking some of your other offices for equally bad railroads? The Chicago North Shore and Milwaukee electric line here is so awful that it had a good deal to do with my selling my house in Glenview and moving into Wilmette, where there is better service.

MAX KARANT

Chicago, Ill.

Sirs:

I think you should check the Rock Island Railroad trains from Joliet, Ill. to Chicago. . . .

Long Island commuters better quit beefing about bum transportation service. Detroiters have been moaning about their DSR since 1918.

ROBERT J. DOUCETTE

Lawrence, Mass.

Sirs:

. . . The individual commuter has an easy way to make his dissatisfaction felt. Every day each commuter should fill out two postcards giving the numbers of the trains he rode that day, their scheduled arrival times and when they actually arrived. Each card should be signed plainly and one mailed to Milo R. Maltbie, Chairman, Public Service Commission, 233 Broadway, New York 7, N.Y. and the other to M. W. Clement, President, Long Island Rail Road, Pennsylvania Station, New York 1, N.Y.

THEODORE A. PLATZ

Huntington, N.Y.

Sirs:

My great-grandfather was the first president of the Long Island Rail Road. It was a good railroad then, and it is a good railroad now. I have lived on Long Island for 20 years and I am

As an information girl for the Long Island Rail Road, I found the commuters pleasant, good-natured, philosophic—completely lovable. Although it has been three years since I last saw their happy beaming faces, it hurts to know they are speaking so unkindly of the railroad I loved.

PRINCESS ANNE

Sirs:

We realize that LIFE tries to appeal to all types of people. Nevertheless we feel that in the article about Princess Anne and King Michael, nauseatingly entitled "I Love Him, I Love Him" (LIFE, Feb. 2), you are entering a field already sufficiently covered by movie magazines and the true love and confession publications.

We will expect the memoirs of Lana Turner in some future issue. They will undoubtedly be entitled, "I Love Him, I Marry Him, I Hate Him, I Divorce Him."

Your article quotes a question asked by Reporter Frizell: "But surely he has kissed you on the lips?" Really, what a shocking lack of taste in the question. I for one prefer to speculate quietly about this matter.

BEAUTY PATCHES

Sirs:

THE DEVIL

Sirs:

I see where you claim to have overheard a conversation of the Devil on New Year's Eve in a New York nightclub (LIFE, Feb. 2). I don't doubt your sincerity but I happen to know the Devil wasn't anywhere near a New York nightclub on that date. I have plenty of evidence that he was in his office in Hell feverishly working overtime on new and ingenious complications to be incorporated in the forms our government sends its citizens to fill out. . . .

Obviously you were listening to an imposter.

Some things you should know about the common cold

No. 209 in a series of messages from Parke, Davis & Co.
on the importance of prompt and proper medical care.

MOST PEOPLE in the United States and Canada have two or more colds a year, each lasting about two weeks and causing a considerable amount of stuffy discomfort.

The danger of the common cold lies mainly in the other infections that may follow after it. For a cold lessens your resistance, and is likely to pave the way for other, more serious, respiratory ailments.

Sinusitis, ear infections, bronchitis, and the various forms of pneumonia are frequently ushered in by a cold. Pneumonia, particularly, is likely to attack a person who is overtired, or run-down because of a severe cold.

True, many of these respiratory diseases are not as dangerous as they used to be. (Modern infection-fighting drugs—such as penicillin and the sulfa drugs—offer highly effective treatment for many cases.)

But, of course, it is always better to prevent a serious illness whenever possible.

If you have a cold, it's just good sense to stay away from people, to avoid spreading the infection; and to get plenty of rest—in bed if possible.

If your cold is accompanied by fever, a persistent cough, or a pain in the chest, face, or ear, call your doctor at once.

The sooner you seek his help, the more he can do to help you avoid a long and serious illness.

And, in the case of children, an early examination may disclose that what appears to be only a cold may instead be a starting symptom of an entirely different disease, such as measles or scarlet fever.

SEE YOUR DOCTOR. Never try the foolhardy experiment of dosing yourself. Your doctor's treatment of one illness may be quite different from his treatment of another illness which appears the same to you.

Let your doctor diagnose your ailments. Let him decide what treatment is best for your particular case. Then follow his instructions to the letter. His advice is the only advice you should take on any question that concerns your health.

You can almost take 'em off like this with Benex Brushless Shave

Dear Benex:

You know, your new brushless shave and a feather might make a great team at that!

I haven't actually tried the feather yet. But I have been treating my rawhide beard to Benex and I get dream shaves. That wonder stuff leaves whiskers limper than spaghetti. They practically collapse when the blade touches 'em!

That's because Benex strips the tough, oily razor-battling "raincoat" off each bristle.

Benex makes beards 1/5 water, you say. Man, that's understatement. Benex gets my beard wetter than a mermaid at 40 fathoms! My blade slips through the stubble like an All-American back through a bunch of high school subs.

Right... Benex actually lets beards soak up 1/5 their weight in water.

Benex, the pleasure is all mine. You have put a new complexion on my shaving troubles...and me.

Many thanks,

Louis M. Johnson

What's more, Benex keeps 'em flooded all shave long

Beards become 1/5 water
(and shavers completely blissful)

P. S. to you with the problem beard—Benex gives super shaves—closer, quicker, fresher-feeling! Benex goes easy on, easy off—no greasy feel... just wash face, spread on, shave, rinse. Benex won't clog razor—light and creamy, it rinses instantly... won't gum up razor or drain. Get it? Get it today at your drug counter.

Bristol-Myers' Brushless Wonder.

AS ARMY COMMANDER Washington was painted romantically by Charles Willson Peale. Portrait celebrates victory in battles of Trenton and Princeton by including Nassau Hall and columns of prisoners (left background).

FRIENDLY FACE of Washington at 47 was painted by Charles Willson Peale in 1779. It is oldest portrait here.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES

... WHICH OF THESE SHOWS WASHINGTON?

COPIED PORTRAIT was done around 1790 by Charles Polk, who did 50 portraits but never saw Washington.

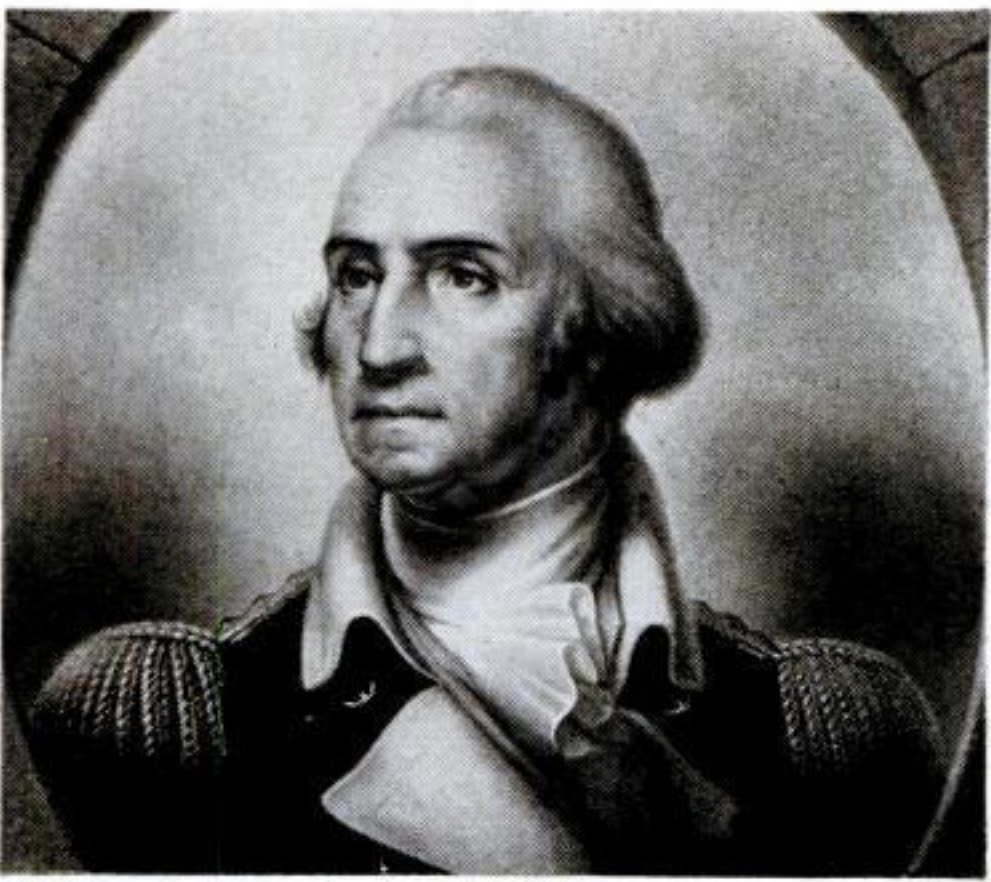

HOMELIEST WASHINGTON was painted by James Sharples. Washington had reddish hair, powdered it white.

SQUIRE WASHINGTON posed for Robert Edge Pine in 1785 at Mount Vernon, before he was elected President.

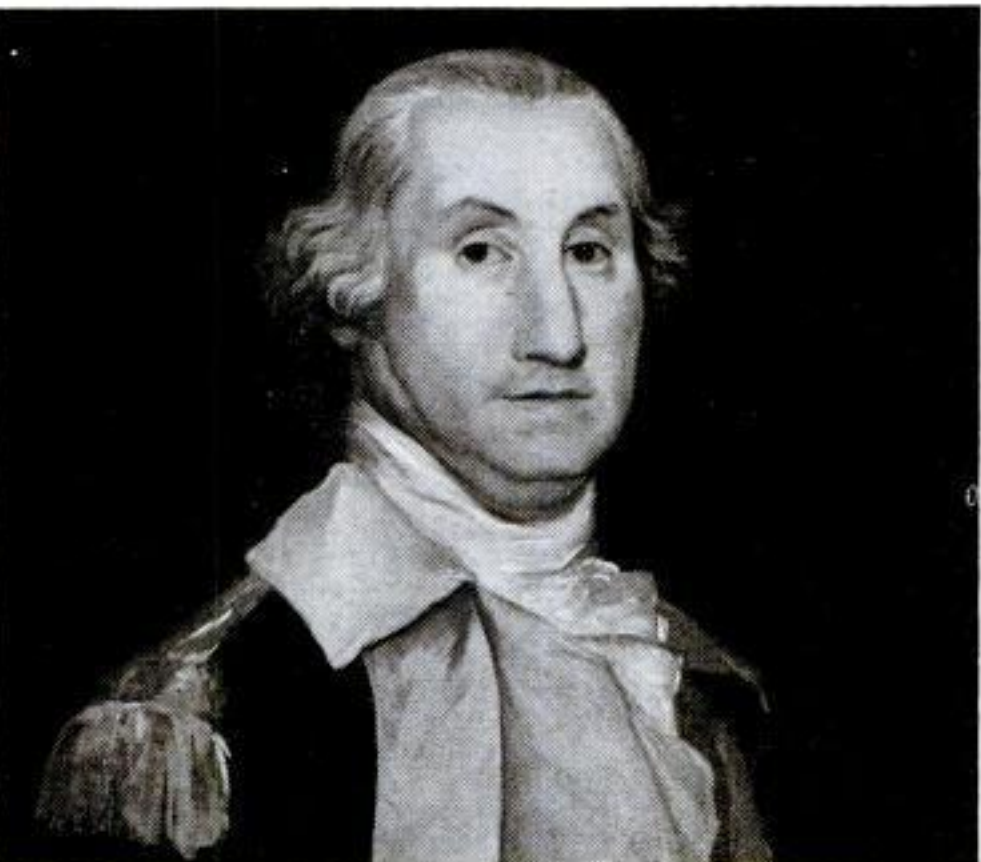

BEMEDALED WASHINGTON was done by Thomas Sully. The medal denotes membership in an officers' club.

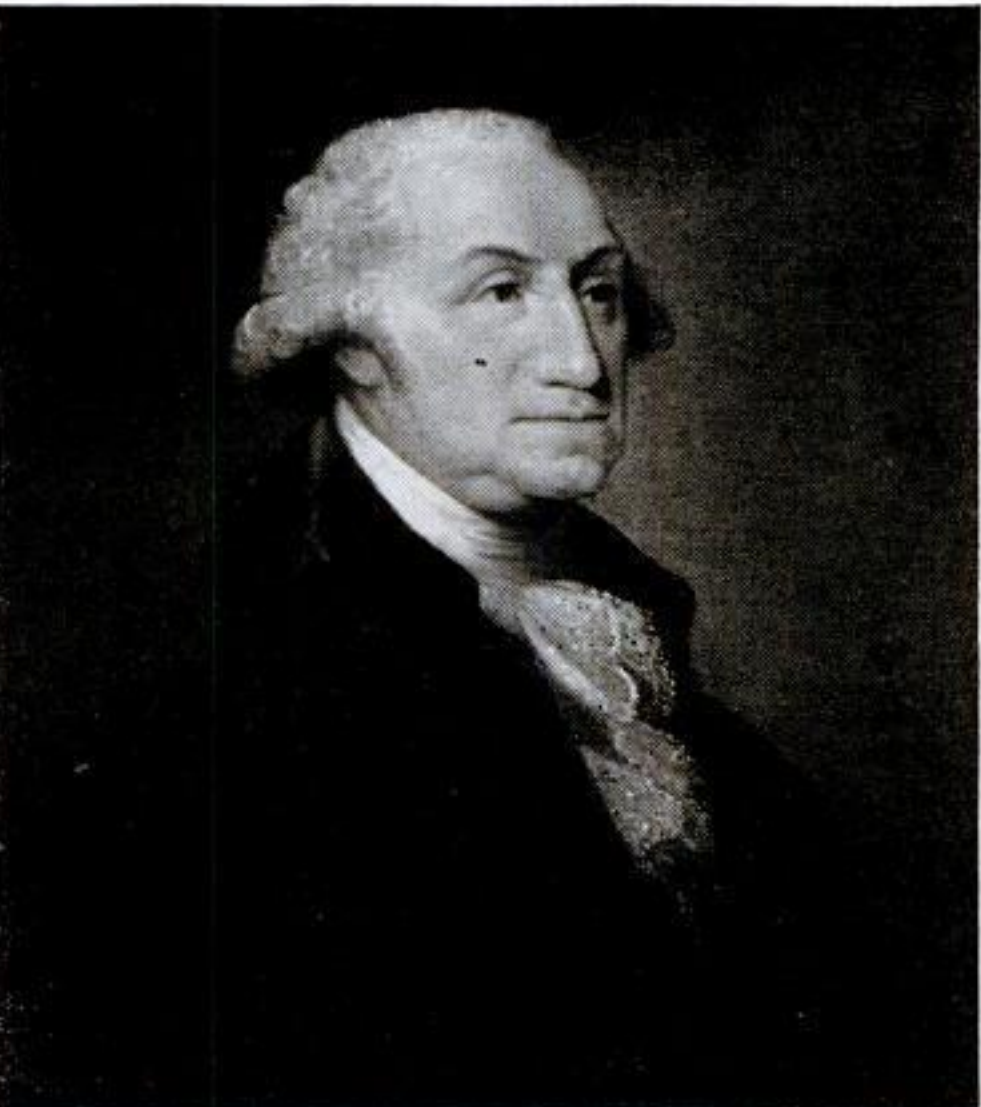

STERN FACE was painted by Rembrandt Peale, son of Charles W. Peale, who also painted the general (opposite).

Among the minor battles waged by General George Washington was a score of face-to-face skirmishes with portrait painters. The general's reluctant consent to pose was won only by insistent artists, and then sometimes only after heckling from his wife. When a painter arrived Washington would sit for him unhappily, grumbling and chafing in his chair and on occasion even falling sound asleep. Such an unsatisfactory sitter was a trouble to the artists who were trying to paint him. No two seem to agree on exactly what Washington looked like. In every portrait the general's face came out a little differently, until today it is impossible to say which of those reproduced here shows the real George Washington.

FAVORITE PORTRAIT of Washington himself was by Joseph Wright, recommended by Benjamin Franklin.

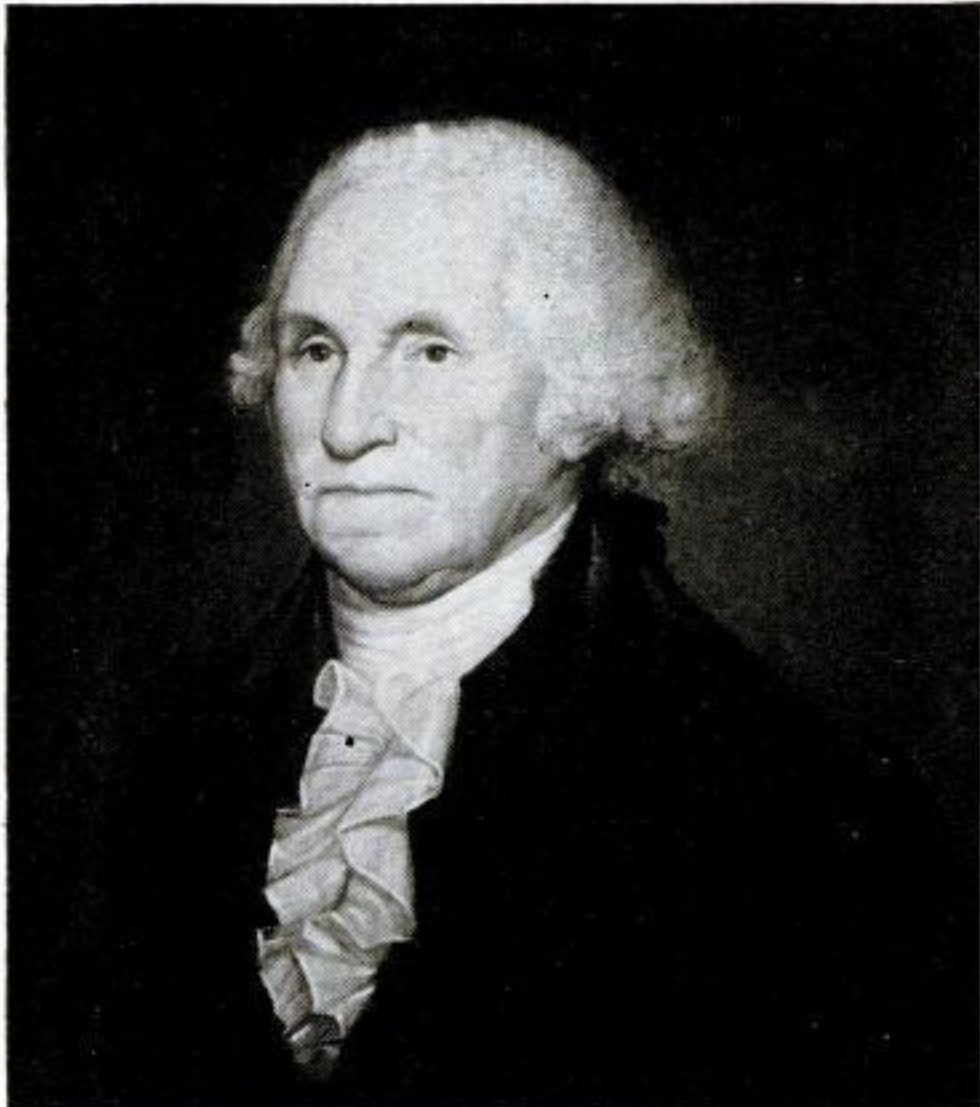

HEAVY-JOWLED WASHINGTON was painted by Edward Savage. Washington had blue eyes and pale cheeks.

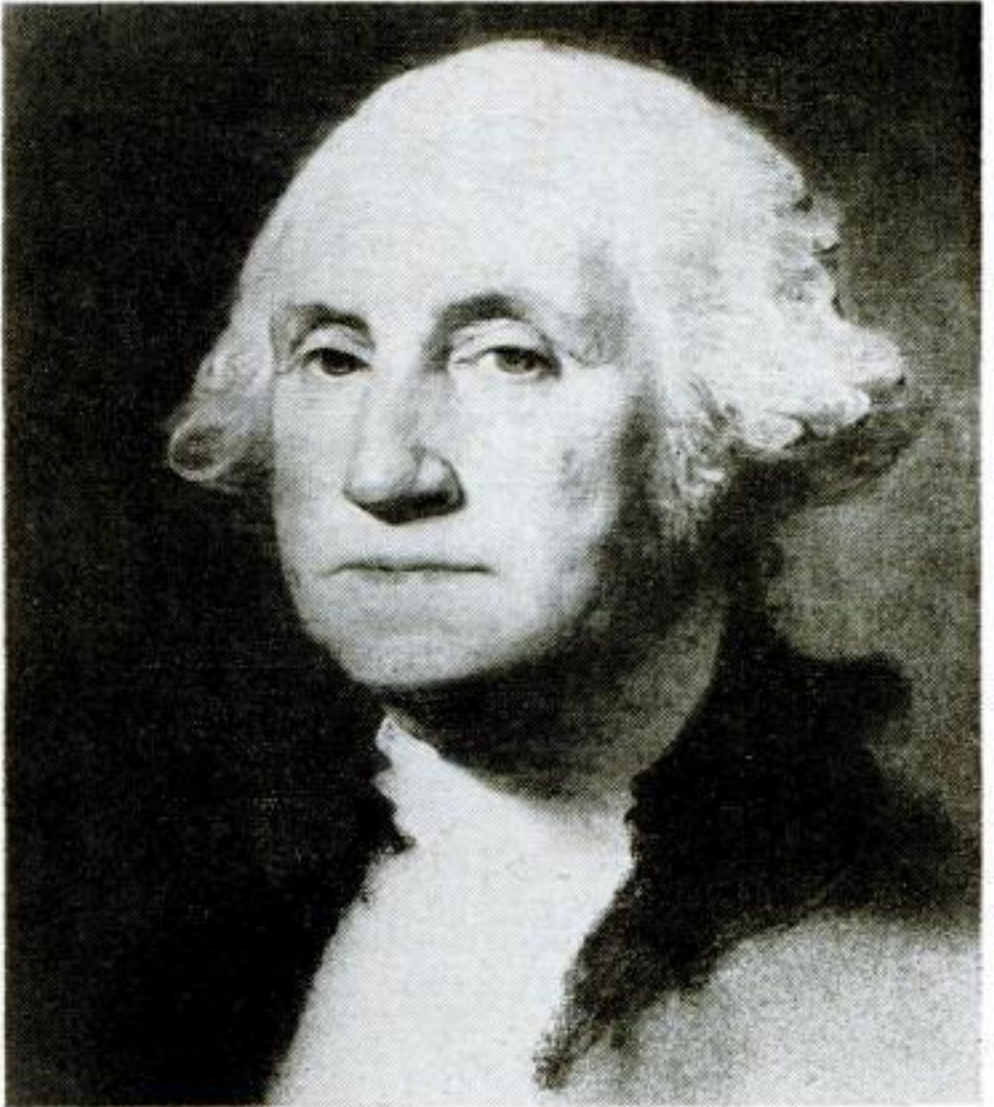

AS FIRST PRESIDENT. Washington in 1796 posed stiffly, sword in hand, for Gilbert Stuart, who made a fortune selling his portraits of Washington. Here the President's mouth is misshapen due to a new set of false teeth.

AGED WASHINGTON looks tired. Portrait was done by Rembrandt Peale four years before Washington died.

BEST-KNOWN WASHINGTON is on 3¢ stamps. Artist Gilbert Stuart never finished it but sold 70 copies.

FEMININE WASHINGTON was portrayed in London's Rambler's Magazine. It shows him thrashing Britannia while Holland, France and Spain approve.

HIS CARICATURES

The indignities of being idealized by portrait painters were small compared to those George Washington suffered at the hands of cartoonists. The enemy British magazines during Revolutionary times made sport of his features and also his manner of dress (above). Once the laughing British even circulated a terrible story purporting to be a deathbed confession of Washington's wife Martha (who actually was still very much alive at the time). In this confession the British reported that Martha had said the general was really not a man at all but, instead, a woman.

BOYISH WASHINGTON (right) pulls 13 colonies, represented by zebra, toward himself as Lord North (left) and British try to pull zebra away from him.

FOR THRIFTY MAIN DISHES

... CATCH ONTO THE

Kraft DOUBLE BOILER trick!

A KRAFT CLASSIC YOU'LL USE DOZENS OF WAYS—quick-made Velveeta sauce

It's smooth as satin . . . golden as a buttercup . . . rich tasting! And to make cheese sauce the speedy Velveeta way you simply do this: Put $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of Kraft's famous cheese food in the top of a double boiler. When it has melted, (which Velveeta always does beautifully) gradually stir in $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of milk. Your glorious sauce is ready—to add cheddar cheese flavor and fine food value to many a dish. Actually Velveeta helps supply high-quality, complete protein plus other important milk nutrients.

Better buy Velveeta by the 2-pound loaf so you'll have plenty to spread and slice for snacks and sandwiches as well as for cooking. Try the "double boiler" trick soon; serve the Velveeta sauce on eggs, fish, macaroni, etc.—and in this grand vegetable main dish:

With a $2\frac{1}{2}$ " cookie cutter cut circles from $\frac{1}{8}$ "-thick slices of day-old bread. With a smaller cutter, remove center ring from two thirds of your circles. Brush with melted butter or Parkay Margarine and toast under the broiler. Make Velveeta sauce as described at left. Add 1 cup cooked peas and 1 cup cooked, sliced carrots. For each serving use one circle for the base and two rings for top decks, filling generously with the Velveeta mixture. Garnish the top ring with a small cooked onion.

SAVE MONEY—Remember that ounce for ounce there is no other basic food that matches cheese for high quality complete protein . . . for calcium, phosphorus and other nutrients from milk.

Copr. 1948 by Kraft Foods Company

The world's favorite cheeses are made or imported by KRAFT

It's tantalizingly sharp! And "Old English" is a Kraft pasteurized process cheese—always cooks perfectly.

It's mellow as old wine—this golden Chantelle with scarlet coat. Gay and delicious on your cheese tray.

MacLaren's Imperial is the aristocrat of aged cheddars, famous over 50 years in this country and Canada.

Kay Brand is a mellow natural cheddar made of pasteurized milk. The newest Kraft triumph.

WEALTHY FAMILY

If family happiness is family wealth, this family seems to have it.

And they all agree that the richest item in their fortune is the wonderful country they live in. They travel it, explore it, enjoy it, record their adventures year after year.

The speedometer on their Dodge Sedan reads more than 100,000 miles.

Incidentally, their record book, for all that mileage, shows a total mechanical expense of $24.60.

That, says Mr. Bunce, is Dodge Dependability down to date. The family agrees and will tell you all about it if you ask them.

LIFE'S COVER

The spectacular skiing maneuver on LIFE's cover goes by the formidable name of Geländesprung. It is a leap upward and forward in which the skier propels himself with his sharp poles. This is a bit too difficult for the beginner, but experienced skiers like Norwegian-born Olof Rodegard do a Geländesprung when they are hurdling obstacles in cross-country skiing. Rodegard is a 37-year-old professional who gave 1,800 skiing lessons last year at Timberline Lodge on Oregon's Mt. Hood, where Ralph Crane took the magnificent color photographs which appear on pages 71 through 85.

THE STORY OF JIEVUTE PAULEKIUTE

Thirty-one years ago in a sooty Pennsylvania mining town, a Lithuanian immigrant couple named Paulekiute became parents of a girl, whom they named Jievute. When Jievute was 4 the parents moved to Chicago and were divorced. They had settled in the Lithuanian colony on Chicago's South Side, and there in the noisome air of the polyglot stockyards district Jievute grew up.

In 1931 Jievute went to Englewood High School in Chicago, helped with school plays, and changed her name to its English equivalent, Eva Paul. In 1933, while still a junior, Eva entered a beauty contest at Chicago's Century of Progress Exposition where she became "Miss Lithuania." In 1935, having finished school in Lowell, Ind., she enrolled at Northwestern University but quit after a year and a half to try to get on the New York stage.

By 1939 she had managed to get some tiny parts, and then she was cast as Pearl in a road company version of the lusty Broadway hit, Tobacco Road. While this drama of Georgia low life was playing in Boston, Eva became exposed to Back Bay high life through a socialite named Richard Sears, then an undergraduate at Harvard. Eva's courtship included Christmas caroling on Beacon Hill and ended with her marriage to Sears in Washington, D.C. in February 1941. The Sears family liked Eva. So did most of Boston. Six months after her marriage she was admitted to the Social Register. But the marriage was unhappy and ended amiably six years later in a Reno divorce court. By then Eva was known as Barbara Sears.

Eighteen months ago at a dinner in a New York restaurant Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Liz) Whitney introduced Barbara to Winthrop Rockefeller, grandson of John D. Rockefeller and, at 34, the most eligible bachelor in the U.S. "Win, I want you to meet a perfectly charming girl," she had said. Soon it was Win and Bobo. Last week Winthrop recalled: "I saw her and I knew I was gone."

On Feb. 10 they drove 60 miles from Palm Beach to out-of-the-way Okeechobee, filed their application for a marriage license. They hoped no one would find out. But an alert Okeechobee reporter did, and the news got top billing as a "Cinderella" romance in the nation's press. On Feb. 13, 50 socialite guests, including the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, came to a discreet evening wedding reception, and just 14 minutes after the three-day waiting period expired at midnight Jievute Paulekiute became Mrs. Winthrop Rockefeller.

AS SENIOR at Lowell in 1935 Eva belonged to Red Peppers, an honor society.

AS MRS. SEARS in 1941 she made the Boston Social Register in six months.

AS PEARL BENSEY in Tobacco Road in 1939 Eva played biggest theatrical part.

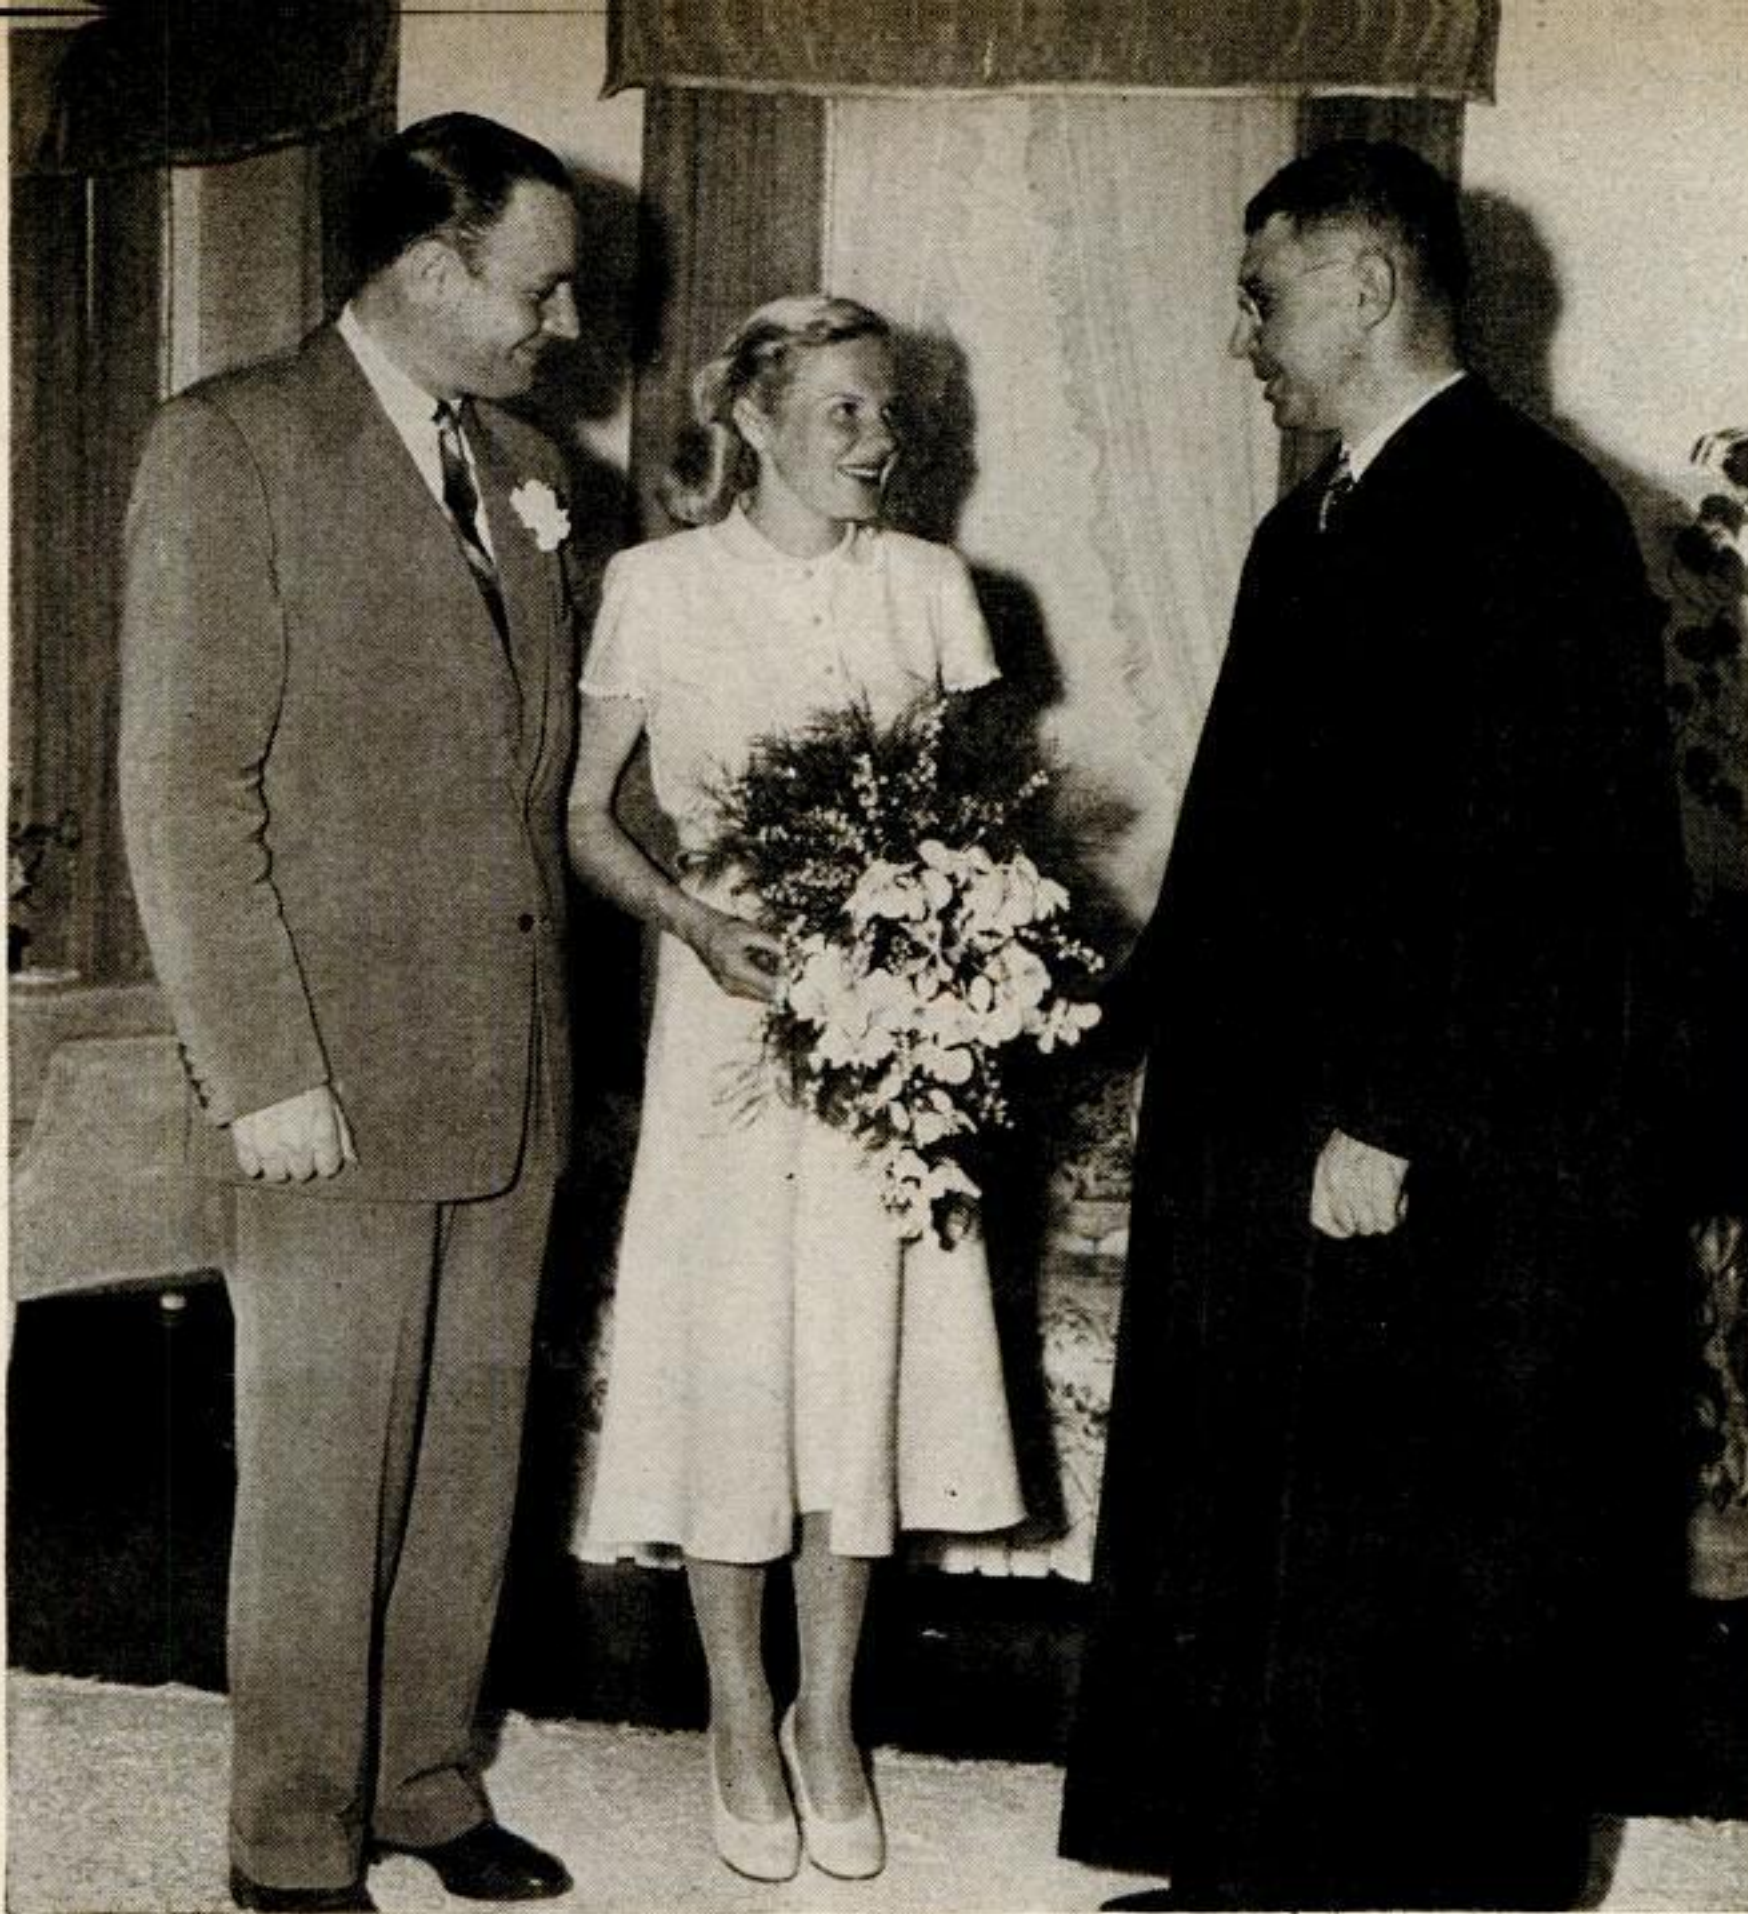

GLAMOUR PICTURE was made for Eva to show movie talent scouts. She got a few western roles.

NEW YORK HOME was fourth-floor apartment. It overlooks Third Avenue elevated but is reported to be lavishly furnished.

HOW TO THINK ABOUT "CIVILIZATION"

Is it just an accident, or is there some strange significance in the fact that Toynbee's great Study of History (p. 119) and the Hilliard-Sigman song called Civilization (Bongo, Bongo, Bongo, I don't want to leave the Congo) should be so popular at the same time? Toynbee takes it pretty much for granted that civilization is a good thing; the song, not so. Maybe Toynbee should write another book answering the not altogether frivolous question raised by the song.

Americans, with few exceptions, have also taken the desirability of civilization for granted. One of the exceptions was Mark Twain, who called our civilization "a shabby poor thing," said "I hate the sound of it," and wished "it was in hell, where it belongs." But even Twain acknowledged that "Poor as it is, it is better than real savagery, therefore we must stand by it." He had to line up with the majority after all, and the majestic word "civilization" gradually became practically synonymous with everything Americans hold dear.

As Charles Beard put it in The American Spirit, it has served us as "a powerful ultimatum of thought, the highest earthly tribunal for the trial of causes, the crowning sanction." Every orator appeals to it to justify whatever he is for or against at the moment. The only word that approaches it in all-around oratorical utility is its opposite, "chaos." As the advancement of civilization is the purpose of, so chaos is always the inevitable alternative to, whatever program the orator (or editorial writer) has in mind. Frank Moore Colby once described the formula for serious magazine writing thus: "Unless measures are taken at once to avert a certain contemporary peril, civilization will either collapse rapidly or will slowly disappear. There is the greatest diversity in the perils and in the measures to be taken, but the formula is always the same and the degree of anxiety is constant." From this viewpoint he added, "Human society is the tenderest of little potted flowers, watered by weekly or monthly tears, surviving by a miracle during the intervals of magazine publications."

Now this urbane, this civilized rib was written a generation ago, before the spread of concentration camps, the revival of torture, the official use of genocide, the splitting of the atom, and similar throwbacks and advances. Civilization was not in fact in danger in Colby's day in the same sense it is now. Even Toynbee, whose enormous learning ought to make a man pretty philosophical, allows that although the species civilization has always hitherto survived the collapse of any particular civilization, ours might, like Samson in the temple, so perish as to take the species with it. So there is at least more justification than there used to be for worrying about "civilization" and perhaps even for fearing "chaos," whatever that may be. Certainly if civilization actually is in danger, urbanity alone will not save it. Something more is required.

What is that something? First, perhaps, a steam behind the passage of our restrictive immigration laws. Thus while our definitions keep changing, what we think about civilization plays a part in what we make of it. Toynbee's attempt to find a law of all civilization is therefore an important part of ours.

The Toynbee theory has been criticized as "subjective," but it is not unscientific. As Toynbee himself points out, a complete scientific documentation of every fact that ever happened would still not make history predictable, any more than a knowledge of where all the cards lie in a bridge game makes it possible to predict the outcome. There is always an unknown—"the reaction of the actors to the ordeal when it actually comes." This unknown is the secret of civilization.

The danger of any theory, including Toynbee's, is that those who half understand it may forget this unknown. Americans especially have a tendency—Bryce called it "mass fatalism"—to feel that destiny is either with us or against us, and that anything we do about it is therefore supererogatory. Sometimes we are very Rome-conscious and find on every side glum parallels pointing to our own "inevitable" decay. A year later we are heading straight for Utopia, and nothing can stop us. Our blood pounds as our thinkers broadcast the news about civilization as though it were a radio audience's boxing hero—he's down, he's up, he's down.

A true sense of history and the meaning of civilization should correct that excited weakness. History is pretty wonderful, but that is no reason to fall into the Hegel-Stalin error of confusing it with God. It is also a mistake to confuse the values which our civilization has taught us, and through which we can still improve it, with "civilization" itself. That would be a case of what Toynbee calls the "idolization of the ephemeral"—making a god of a king, an empire, a technique, a parliament, or any other mere institution.

Civilization is not an absolute value; it is rather a by-product, a thing that happens when men set out to achieve things for the sake of something else. The idea of civilization as such has never motivated a great civilization yet. So the way to help preserve our civilization is to understand it, prize it, learn from it; and then forget it and go about the duties of daily life.

A BROADCAST WORTH HEARING

Sirs:

Your searching editorial (American "Generosity") in the Jan. 26 issue of LIFE should be read by every American. It shows clearly how and why most Americans are fooling themselves—a very dangerous state of mind and heart in this day of world need. Honest facing of the facts—as you present them—is what we need to lift us out of the fool's paradise in which we've been living in our giving habits, and will do much to wipe out that "uglier gulf—between those who feel a personal responsibility for want, grief and ignorance in the world, and those who don't."

More voices must be raised to show America how great is our responsibility in these days. Just after reading your editorial I also read the text of a nationwide broadcast which the Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, will give over 600 radio stations on Feb. 29 in connection with the appeal for the support of the interdenominational relief agency, "Church World Service." Bishop Sherrill will do far more than ask for "a million dollars in four hours" from Episcopalians for his "Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief"—he will be joining LIFE in the appeal made in your editorial of Jan. 26, and calling Americans to face the truth about American "Generosity."

better knowledge of what civilization is. It is a fairly young word. Boswell couldn't persuade Dr. Johnson to put it in his dictionary; it was too new. To Emerson it announced itself by "feats of liberty and wit." A religious Englishman (W. T. Stace) calls it "organized goodness." The pessimistic Brooks Adams defined it as social concentration resulting from the drives of fear and greed. His Law of Civilization and Decay, published in 1895, made civilization a political issue; the Bryan forces quoted it throughout the campaign. Another book on the subject, the racist Lothrop Stoddard's Revolt Against Civilization (1922) put upgrade towards the top of Cumbres Pass. Near the summit it slows down for "Phantom Curve," a 6-foot-wide ledge hacked out of sheer rock nearly 1,000 feet above the frothing Los Pinos River. Last week, with the wind swirling through the pass, a gigantic snowslide came down the mountainside as the train eased around Phantom Curve. Three of the little cars were swept off the track. One of them hung on the edge of the curve, but the other two rode the snowslide down the mountain like outsized toboggans. Result: none killed; five injured.

to export three million bales of cotton. But he more than made it up by selling short at top of market before slump.

SHORT SELLER Edwin T. Maynard became famous overnight by making some $200,000 in Chicago. He based decision on Dec. 7 prediction by Secretary Anderson that one million extra bushels of corn would appear on market.

THE MARKETS TAKE A SLUMP

As commodities dip, the consumer wonders if low prices can be far behind

For more months than they like to remember, U.S. consumers have been squeezed by a steady, seemingly inexorable rise in the cost of things they have to buy. Then on Feb. 4 the commodity futures market in Chicago dropped as far as Exchange regulations permit in a single day. For nine days, despite a few rallies, cotton and wheat, oats and corn kept going down, and housewives began to wonder if lower prices were really on the way.

But all the financial experts could tell them was that it was too soon to be sure. Commodity futures had slumped spectacularly, but they were merely contracts to deliver commodities at a future date. When cash commodities (chart, opposite), which are ready for delivery, dropped too, farmers held back and watched for them to go up again. Stocks were going down in Wall Street, but they have no immediate effect on the cost of living. Even the price cuts of a few cents in the stores did not mean much yet, especially with the market rallying at week's end.

Forecasters were wary when they tried to compare 1948's market with 1929's crash and 1937's recession. But when they looked at the "shake-out" of 1920 signs of a parallel appeared. There was no way of knowing if the parallel would continue. Even if it did, $2 shirts would not be back to $2 for a while. In 1920 the dip was the beginning of the end of the war-caused boom. But the end was two years away.

The concrete spillway (above) of the Fort Peck Dam in Montana is a mile-long triangle, open at one corner, with sloping 30-foot sides. This winter it became a weird trap for a panicky male mule deer, which was chased into it by a pack of hungry coyotes. At first the deer tried to run out of the spillway's open end (below), but was afraid to cross the and Sean feel De Valera has abandoned principles they all fought for in the tumultuous days of the Irish Rebellion. Sean tried his best to oust old "Dev" as Taoiseach (premier), but his party won only 10 parliament seats.

AT 65, EAMON DE VALERA IS WEARY BUT TOUGH

OLD MAUD SENDS HER BOY OUT TO BEAT "DEV"

But Irish premier gets most votes

In Eire, many a voter felt it was time for crusty old Eamon de Valera (above) to bow out of Irish politics, which he has dominated for 16 years. For the first time, a bright young man and a noisy young party—Sean MacBride and his Clann na Poblachta—were after old "Dev" hammer and tongs. In the Feb. 4 election MacBride fell far short of scoring an upset, but he did create enough diversion to destroy Dev's majority in the parliament. Dev was still premier, but it seemed likely that his days of one-man rule were drawing to a close.

Foremost of those who rejoiced in Dev's difficulties was Eire's magnificent heroine Maud Gonne MacBride (opposite), 81-year-old mother of candidate Sean. Those who watched her at the polls saw only sad remnants of her fabled beauty, but they could see, and feel, the tremendous spirit that long ago inspired Irish Poet W. B. Yeats to write:

How many loved your moments of glad grace,
And loved your beauty with love false or true,
But one man loved the pilgrim soul in you,
And loved the sorrows of your changing face.

HOUSING WAS MOST CONTROVERSIAL ISSUE

SLUMS like these near Dublin were roundly denounced by anti-De Valera candidates. But this weary issue, already labored many times before, failed to arouse much excitement.

HOUSING PROJECTS like this one, also near Dublin, were cited by Premier de Valera in reply to critics who said he has a "long finger" (Irish for not getting things done).

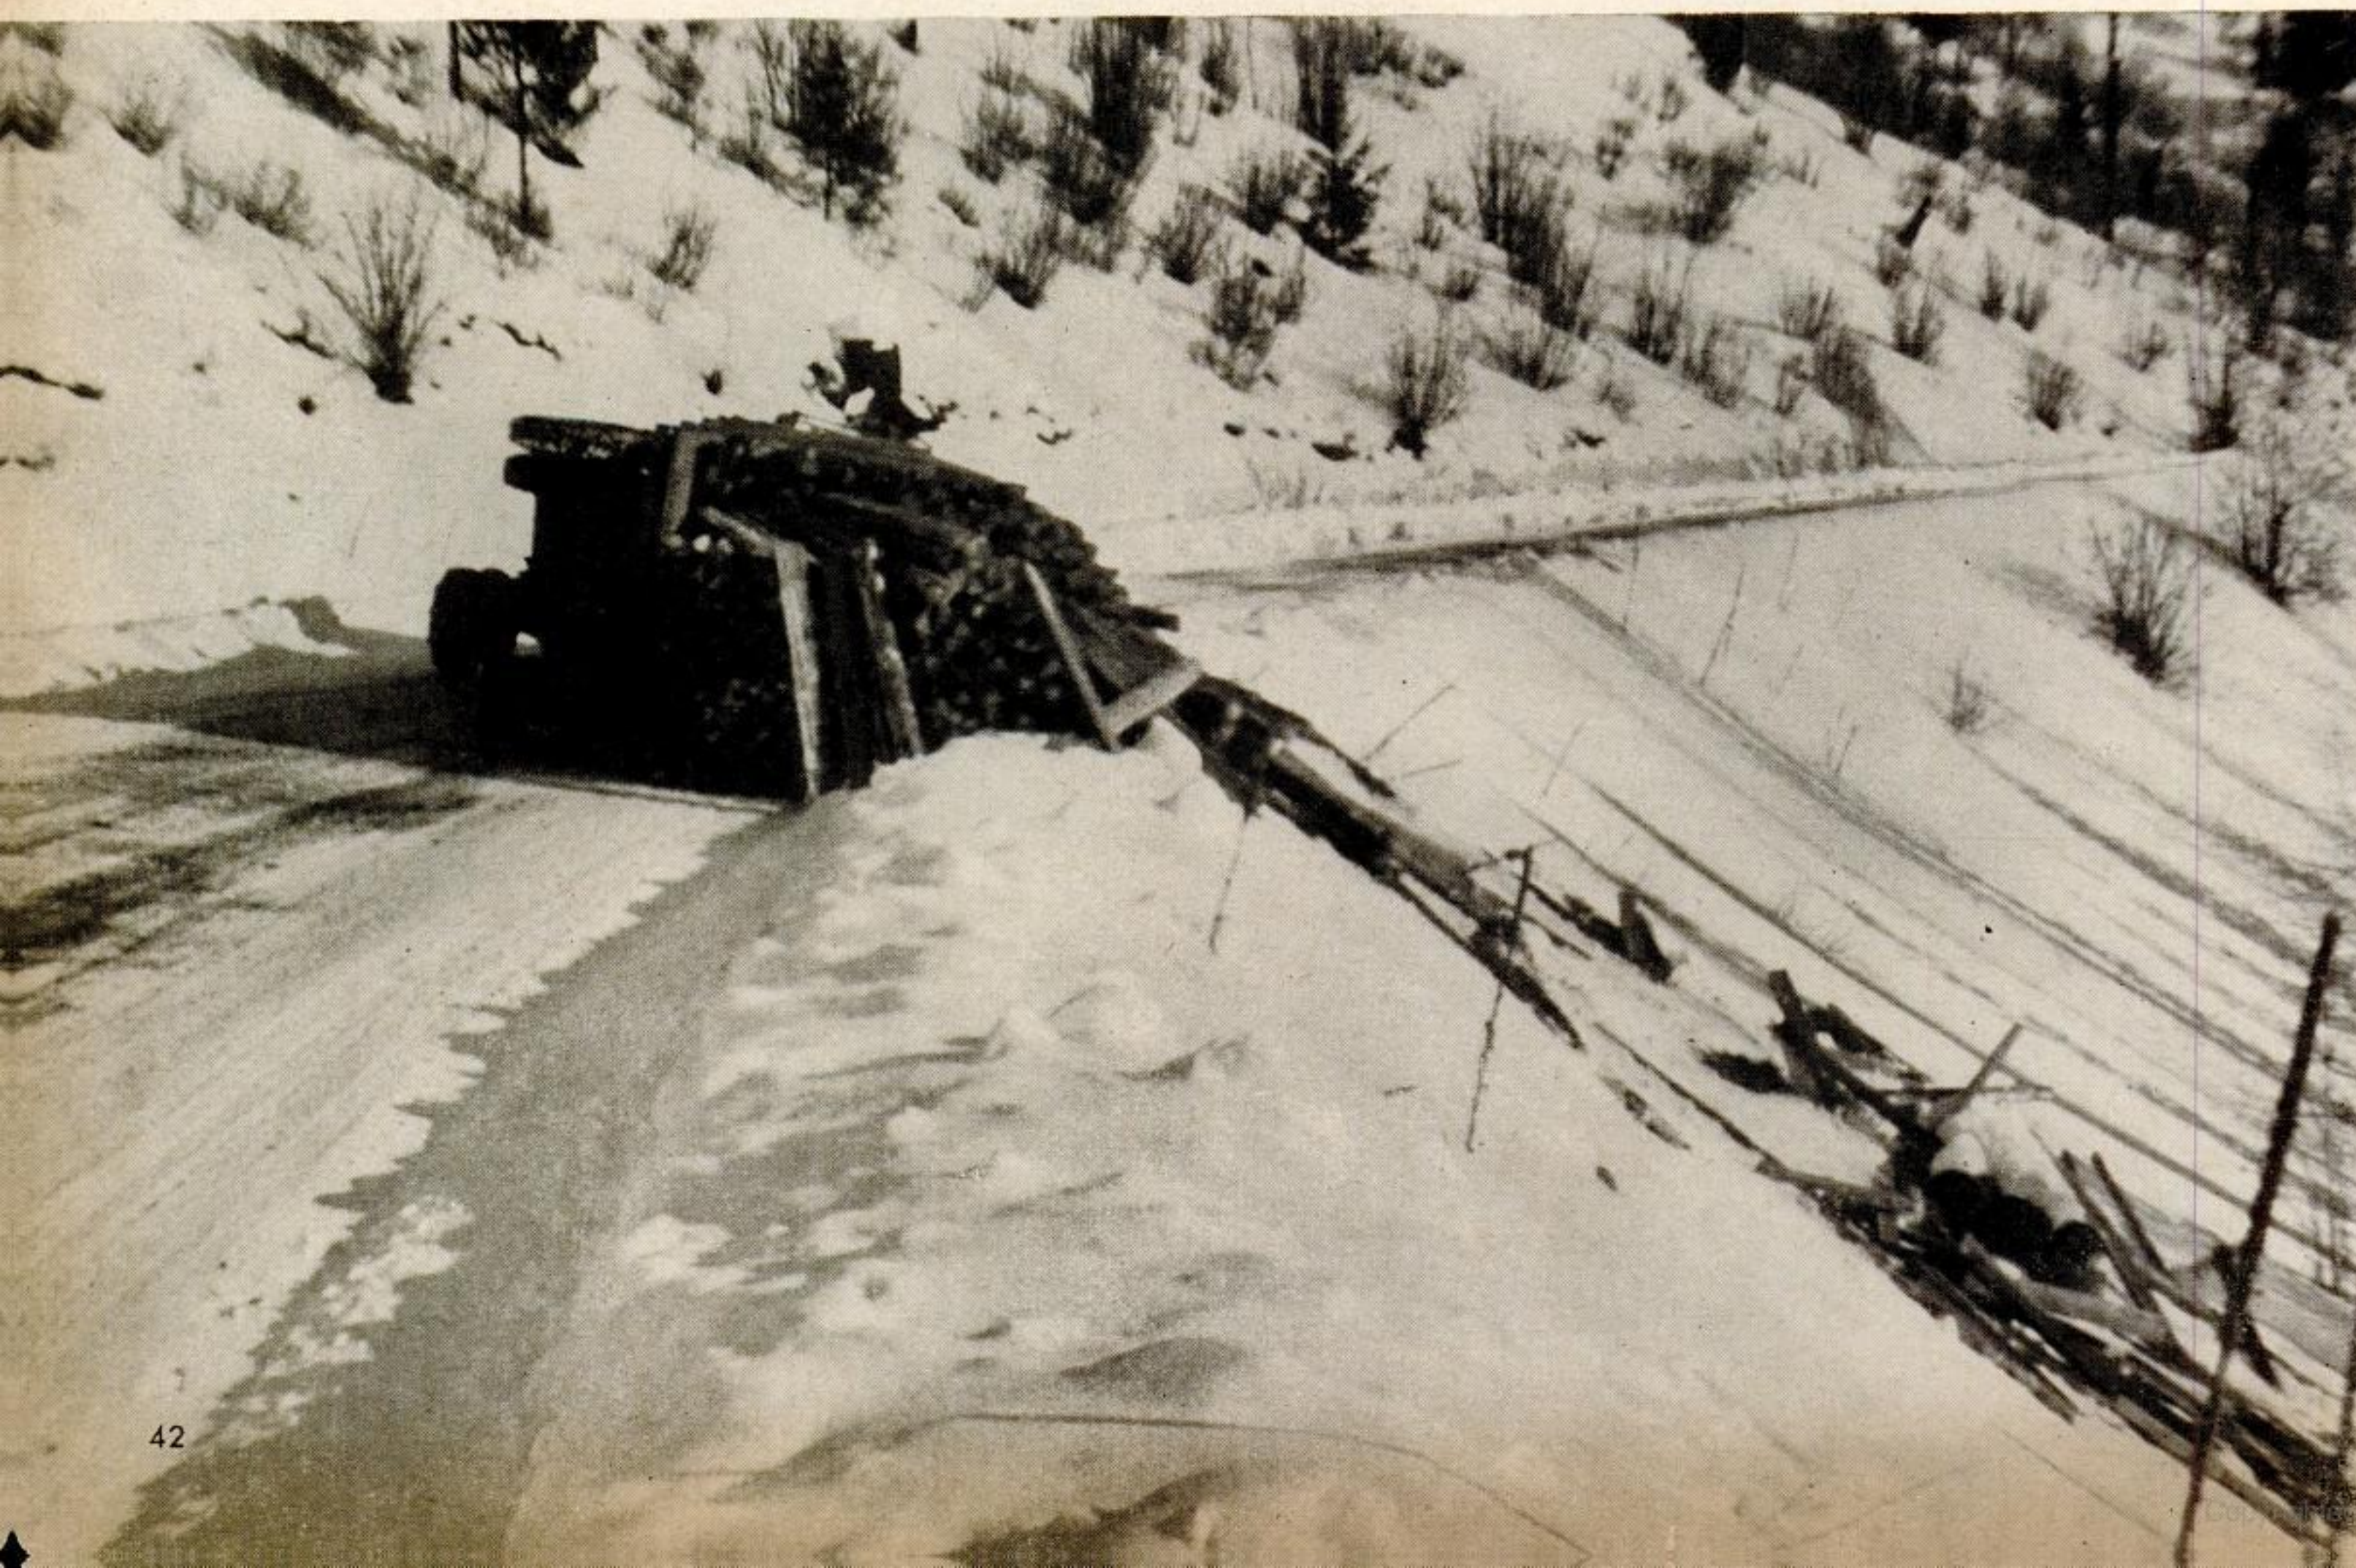

OLD MAUD AT THE POLLS, clad in the widow's weeds which she wears for Ireland's sorrows, grins as she endorses her ballot for her son Sean. Although she is now bent and enfeebled by age, Maud Gonne once stood a full 6 feet tall and was a brilliant actress, painter and linguist as well as one of the most fiery patriots in Eire's history.

MR. SECRETARY MEETS THE CUBS

In Washington on Feb. 10 seven members of Cub Scout Pack 232, Bethesda, Md. marched gravely into the awesome office of the U.S. Secretary of State. There, before the august author of the European Recovery Program, the Cubs recited their plan for helping Europe. Called the "Junior Marshall Plan," it was a proposal to raise money through movies and use it to "adopt" children in Europe. Secretary Marshall called the plan "a very fine thing" and gave it his endorsement. The Secretary also told the Cubs how he has seen the world change since his boyhood and explained that America has become its "acknowledged leader." Then, the formalities over, Bobby Linden, chief of the Cub delegation, eagerly scrambled into Marshall's big swivel chair. The amused Secretary of State quietly turned the chair (below), looked down at the 9-year-old boy and observed, "Perhaps he would like to sit there permanently."

"BOURGEOIS" COMPOSERS

Last week the Communist Party Central Committee in Moscow took up its ideological razorstrop and tanned the hides of Russia's three top composers. Dmitri Shostakovich and Aram Khachaturian (above) and Sergei Prokofiev (below), said the Committee, had been turning out works which "smelled strongly of the spirit of bourgeois music of Europe and America." Furthermore, "this vicious formalistic trend against the people" has got to stop, went on the Committee, although it failed to indicate just how abstract music could undermine political philosophy. For Shostakovich, this dressing down represented a third visit to the Marxian woodshed. He had been roundly flayed in 1936 for writing a diversionist opera called "Lady Macbeth of Myensk." For Khachaturian, it was even worse. He could only gnaw his nails in despair, waiting for the Committee to find out that his "Sabre Dance," now called "Sabre Dance Boogie," is a hit in the hopelessly decadent juke boxes in the hopelessly bourgeois U.S.A.

reasons all, why sailors swear by the sails made of NYLON!

NYLON CAN TAKE IT! When 50 tons of loaded airplane land on the runway, that, friends, is tire punishment. And nylon helps tires take it! Strongest, lightest, toughest fiber that ever gave backbone to a heavy truck or plane tire—that's NYLON!

HOLDS ITS SHAPE! Forget shrinking, sagging, stretching! Here's a sweater you can toss in the tub, hang up to dry—a sweater that dries fast, never needs to be "blocked" or reset, a soft and snugly sweater. Look for the sweater labeled NYLON!

STRONGER! SAFER! When a mountain climber trusts his life to a rope . . . he's lucky if the rope is nylon. For nylon takes terrific stress without snapping, stands sudden loads with less strain, resists abrasion. And it's light, elastic, easy to handle!

EASY CLEANING! Nylon blouses tub and hang up to dry, hold their shape, their bright good looks. They're lighter, stronger, longer-wearing, outwear other racing colors five to one. Jockeys say they're cooler, too . . . less apt to wrinkle or pick up dust.

STANDS REPEATED WASHINGS. Commercial laundries use strong nylon net bags to hold each "family wash" in the washer...and the nets last longer than any laundry bag ever used before. If it's stronger, lighter, extra long wearing . . . it's NYLON!

Look for all these in products made of nylon fibers:

M-G-M EXECUTIVES, who make an estimated aggregate of $2,400,000 annually, discuss studio's operations at conference headed by L. B. Mayer (foreground). Mr. Mayer, a founder of M-G-M, has assumed closer direction of the studio and even sold his racing stable. Recently he reshuffled his executives to make them work harder too.

TROUBLE IN HOLLYWOOD

Movie makers struggle to offset the effects of soaring costs, loss of foreign revenue and bad films

Most industries which ate high on the hog during wartime have already had to tighten their belts, but only recently did reconversion hit Hollywood. The chorus of lamentation which greeted it was woeful to hear. The Screen Writer began a series of articles headed "Unemployment." Sam Goldwyn handed his executive employees a 50% pay cut. In reports filtering east there was an ominous recurrence of the word "panic!"

At bottom lay three big troubles: 1) nearly all production costs had risen steadily for 10 years; 2) largely because 1947 had seen few good movies and a lot of bad ones, movie attendance had fallen off; 3) foreign countries, notably England, had taken drastic steps to make sure that their precious dollar credits would be spent on food and fuel rather than films.

The result of all this shriveled profits so seriously that Louis B. Mayer of M-G-M (above) and other worried studio heads held council to see what could be done. They found two solutions. The short-term one was to fire all but the most valuable employees from wartime-padded payrolls and cut down movie production while preparing for a whole new start. The long-term solution was to make movies more cheaply, more efficiently (an aim rarely fulfilled in Hollywood) and to make more of them—in hopes of bringing in the same profit with 10 low-budget movies that used to come in from five costly spectacles.

On the following pages LIFE shows how the movie industry got into trouble and a few avenues it may use to get out. Things are not yet desperate. After seven years of big money Hollywood's position today is like that of a man with $2 million who loses half his capital: shaken but still solvent.

STARS HAVE BEEN MISUSED

GREER GARSON'S glittering career fared badly with Adventure and Desire Me.

CLARK GABLE, too, was in Adventure. Then he made The Hucksters—also weak.

GINGER ROGERS made Magnificent Doll, It Had to Be You—both bad.

JAMES STEWART has acted in two movies since war—one good, one terrible.

COSTLY SCENES HAVE BEEN THROWN AWAY

SHIPWRECK SCENE was made for the recent spectacle, Green Dolphin Street, at a cost of about $150,000.

Then the movie ended up much too long and this scene was cut out. Not a foot of it ever appeared on the screen.

MISTAKES LIKE THESE COST HOLLYWOOD MONEY

Because the public fought to see any and all movies during the wartime boom, producers did not worry much about whether the movies were any good. This habit persisted into 1947, when the boom had abated somewhat and the public was being more careful about what it paid to see. The result: some films failed to show a profit, and the general low quality, of which a few choice examples are shown below, scared many customers away from the few good ones.

Another mistake was the industry's frequent mishandling of its top performers. A big star can always draw a large public, but after a few bad movies the public often forsakes him in disappointment. In this way quite a few big stars have recently lost some of their luster.

A more immediate industry trouble is the high cost of production. For this executives have always blamed unions on account of their princely wage scales and outrageous featherbedding. Producers who waste months developing a single bad script or permit thousands of feet of film to be shot unnecessarily are often quite as guilty. Example (left): a shipwreck, which no moviegoer ever saw.

MANY PICTURES HAVE BEEN BAD

"FOREVER AMBER," one of most expensive movies ever made, came under heavy fire from critics, clergy.

"SONG OF LOVE," with Katharine Hepburn, was a bore except for the Brahms and Schumann it offered.

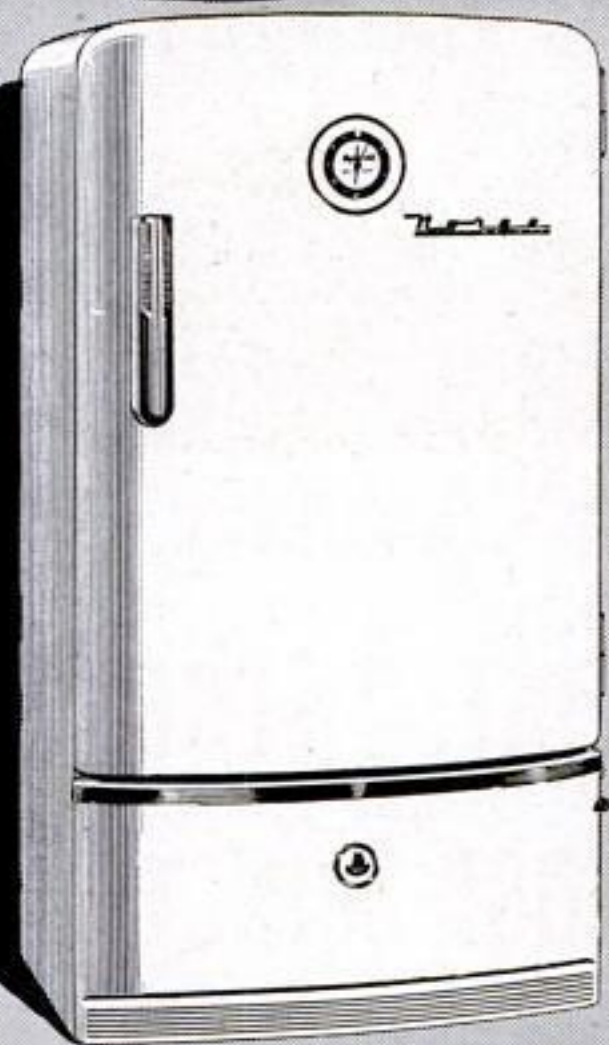

"DEEP VALLEY," a lugubrious epic of rural amour, made Ida Lupino love Dane Clark and stutter slightly.

CALIFORNIA MOVIE THEATER BOOSTS BUSINESS ON SATURDAYS BY OFFERING CARE FOR CHILD CUSTOMERS SO THEIR MOTHERS CAN MARKET WITHOUT WORRY

STUNTS, COST-CUTTING ARE HANDY REMEDIES

Two methods the movie industry is employing to stabilize profits consist of stepping up "showmanship" and reducing costs. The first of these will probably mean more traditional bank nights and personal appearances by stars, may even include new stunts like light nursing service in theaters to bring in more half fares from the half-pint trade (above). To cut costs, studios are paring payrolls, putting a moratorium on lavishness and trying to reduce shooting time (p. 61). In short, many of Hollywood's headaches are curable. The best remedy, however, is still the hardest to come by: making pictures of such excellence that moviegoers will feel they cannot afford to stay away.

Complete comfort for every kind of sleeper—ENTIRELY NEW MATTRESS IDEA

Look for the only mattress with the Red Line at your dealer's. Englander Red Line mattresses or matching box springs $89.95 to $59.75. Others as low as $29.75.

1. Upper layer fits your body
2. Lower layer fits your weight

And good sleep needs two-part support: (1) for body contours, (2) for body weight.

Only the Englander gives you that double support in the greatest mattress improvement in 50 years.

Each spring works independently, tied not at top or bottom by wire, or joined in cotton sacks, but joined in the center by a flexible ribbon of steel. This gives free-floating action.

And if there is "double sleeping" at your house, this individual spring action prevents roll-to-the-middle due to difference in weight.

SLASHING PAYROLLS has already had an effect. Screen Actors Guild lists a membership of 8,500, says that 1,200 of these are normally employed but only 600 today. Above: an unemployed actor applies for state compensation.

REHEARSALS, like this one called by Alfred Hitchcock (right) for Rope, can often reduce costs by cutting down on retakes and actual shooting time when directors arrange scenes while stagehands stand by, running up expense.

COSTUME EPICS are being shelved and costumes put in storage because such movies are too costly. There will be few $3 million spectacles scheduled until prices fall enough so that they can be produced for around $2 million.

King of the Bandits

Sicily's "Robin Hood" is a murderer, a poet and a politician

AT the age of 25, Salvatore Giuliano is the most successful bandit in modern history. From a mountain stronghold frowning down on Sicily's capital city of Palermo, he leads a raggle-taggle tribe of thieves, kidnapers and murderers estimated to number from a few hundred to as many as 5,000. Handsome, dark-eyed, poetical and urbane, he claims that he has effected the biggest redistribution of wealth in Sicily since it was sacked by the Saracens in the Ninth Century.

On an island where banditry and intrigues have a tradition that has carried down to the Mafia (Black Hand) gangs of modern times, Giuliano has risen to the top of his trade in four short but exciting years. Because he is both bold and articulate and because the Italian people are notoriously fond of wild dramatics and dashing adventure, there are many who consider him a 20th Century Robin Hood who uses a pistol or a submachine gun instead of a bow and arrow. His Latin gallantries and his flair for posing as the benefactor of the poor have built this legend to such a point that his name will undoubtedly be remembered in Sicilian folklore in the same way that Jesse James and Billy the Kid are in America. The Italian government has put a price of three million lire on his head—but Giuliano has countered by offering an equal sum for the capture of Italy's minister of the interior.

Such bravado delights the Sicilians, who see in Giuliano a sort of earthy and effective avenging angel in the midst of their hunger and misery. When one little town recently found its spaghetti ration cut off, Giuliano hijacked a couple of government trucks loaded with supplies and distributed them in the main piazza of the town (while, of course, the town for which the trucks were intended went hungry for a week). Tales are told of families facing starvation who find money slipped mysteriously under the kitchen doors of their homes; and of a peasant woman, dying because she could not afford an operation, who awoke one morning to find 50,000 lire tucked under her tear-stained pillow.

Italian police contend that there is more thuggery than philanthropy in the things Giuliano does. Banditry, they point out, can be a profitable business only if there are enough rich persons to rob. Since Sicily is a poor country and Giuliano's standard ransom fee for kidnap victims is 25 million lire ($43,630), there cannot be many people left who are rich enough to afford to be kidnaped. With his clientele "falling off," Giuliano, the police say, is lying in his teeth when he recounts his largesse to the poor.

Giuliano's father was a hod carrier in New York for nearly 20 years and returned to Sicily just in time for Salvatore to be born there rather than in the U.S. This gives the bandit king a chance to boast, as he often does, that even if he wasn't born in the U.S. at least he was conceived there. His birthplace was the mountain village of Montelepre in Palermo province, his present headquarters. It is a few miles from the birthplace of Lucky Luciano, the one-time New York vice lord who was deported back to Italy in 1946.

Going beyond these simple facts, a reader of the countless stories which the Italian press has published about Giuliano faces a baffling succession of wild theories. Was he a naval lieutenant with a brilliant war record? Was he a sharp young lawyer who gave up the practice of defending criminals to become one? Was he a black-market operator or was he a secret agent for the Allied armies? And the question has even arisen: does he really exist?

The first proof of his existence and the full scope of his activities was procured recently by a party of Americans who managed to visit him in his mountain retreat. After passing a check point on the flatlands just outside Palermo, they were led to his village and there ate with his family, met his triggerman and his personal bodyguard. Giuliano posed heroically under a gnarled old tree (p. 63) for the first portrait of him that the world has seen, and talked at length on such assorted subjects as banditry, philosophy and politics. With him at the time was his cousin Francesco Badalementi, "The Black One," one of Giuliano's toughest deputies, who was killed last week in a running gun battle with police on the Via Noce in Palermo.

The Italian press has pinned on Giuliano the half-affectionate label of il bandito gentiluomo. It especially loves the tale—circulated perhaps by the "gentleman bandit" himself—of his encounter with the Duchess of Pratoameno.

This noble lady, it seems, was sitting quietly one afternoon in the spacious stanza di soggiorno of her ancient castle high in the hills of Sicily. She was sipping tea and gazing placidly out over the olive trees, silvery green in the sun, their neat lines filing down to the Tyrrhenian Sea. Suddenly a self-possessed young man entered the room and strode easily across the floor. He bowed, kissed her hand and explained matter-of-factly that his men were looting the castle from dungeon to tower. The duchess wasted no time in fatuous protests but she did make one request. Pointing to her diamond ring, she said, "I ask you only to leave me this. It is the engagement ring given me by my husband, a memory of my youth and of our love." The young man bowed graciously as he removed the ring from her finger, and said, "Knowing this will make me treasure it even more."

On his way out the young man noticed on the duchess' bookshelves an Italian translation of John Steinbeck's In Dubious Battle and asked permission to borrow it. A few days later he returned it with a note: "My dear Duchess, I am returning to you the copy of In Dubious Battle. I do not know how a reactionary like yourself could possibly have appreciated it, so I was tempted to keep it. But, since Giuliano gave his word, here is the book."

Other victims of Giuliano's waywardness, particularly those he kidnaps, are remorselessly harangued by him on the subject of giving to the poor—but they usually have to pay the standard ransom fee for his lecture. (In one case when he kidnaped the wrong man, Giuliano is supposed to have presented him with a bill for board and lodging during his month's captivity.) But his rough-hewn code of justice goes beyond lecturing his captives on moral problems. In Montelepre he is accused of executing one man for Nearly everybody enjoys eating margarine but nobody enjoys coloring it.

The picture you see here shows margarine yellow the way you want it. But do you get it yellow? You do not. You get it white and color it yourself. The law says there is a penalty of 10¢ per pound for the manufacturer to color it yellow the way you want it.

The fact is that now, at a time when every American is desperately trying to save money on food bills, this smooth, nourishing, digestible, economical product is still carrying the burden of discriminatory taxes which date back to the horse-and-buggy days (1886).

Remember the voice of the public is the voice of American lawmakers.

overcharging at the general store, another for stealing from the poor. The village postmaster, it is said, was neatly disposed of for holding out on townsfolk cashing money orders; he had made a final mistake of trying to shortchange Giuliano's sister. In other instances when Giuliano sees fit to commit murder he can do so either brutally or with a graceful flourish. When he recently wiped out three informers in his own gang (the Misuraca brothers) he stood beside their bullet-riddled bodies near the public fountain of the main piazza and scribbled a line on a scrap of paper that he pinned to the chest of one of the betrayers: "The unhappy souls of spies do not go to Paradise."

Poetry, however, is a less serious pursuit for Giuliano than politics. In the best tradition of Sicilian banditry, he thinks of Sicily as God's country and Italy as a province of the devil. To "free" Sicily (from Rome-directed police forces) he has talked of leading an army—and he preaches a brand-new kind of redemption for his land. He thinks Sicily's destiny no longer should be tied to that of Italy, but that instead Sicily should become a part of the U.S., preferably as a 49th state. A cartoon that he himself drew recently (p. 64) illustrates how easily he considers the separation could be made. Aware, however, that there might be some difficulties, Giuliano has muttered about running for election as a deputy of Italy's Constituent Assembly—where his presence at least would add another dash of color to an already excitable and harassed group. In the proper tradition of Italian politicians he already has had garish slogans carrying the message "Long Live Giuliano and Democracy" whitewashed on sun-baked walls of countless Sicilian villages.

On another political front and with what he considers is consistent with his professed love for America, Giuliano has declared the Sicilian hunting season open on all Communists. His gang has personally tossed bombs at C.P. headquarters in several towns, and he is supposed to have led the masked attack on May Day demonstrators at Pian della Ginestra where 8 villagers are said to have been murdered and 33 wounded.

Official Italy was outraged by this performance and an expeditionary force was sent out to get him. After the expedition failed the poker-faced Communist press began to take his pronouncements and defiances of the government at their face value and denounced him as a tool of Sicily's large landholders and feudal barons. Some have even bracketed rowdy Giuliano and gray-haired, soft-spoken James C. Dunn, American Ambassador in Rome, as colleagues in reactionary conspiracy.

Giuliano has shrugged this off. In fact he has capped it by writing to President Truman for aid under the Marshall Plan, arguing that he commands the only really active military force battling Communists in Italy. He recalled that in the last Sicilian election (April 1947) the Communists made an ominously good showing for the traditionally conservative island and, with the Socialists, won the biggest single bloc of seats in Sicily's regional assembly. He thought it would be a pretty serious matter if the Communists and Russia got control of Sicily while the U.S. was working overtime to keep them out of Turkey and Greece. In man-to-man fashion Giuliano admitted that he was pretty well stocked with small arms—all he wanted from the Honorable President, he said, was a shipment of antitank guns and bazookas.

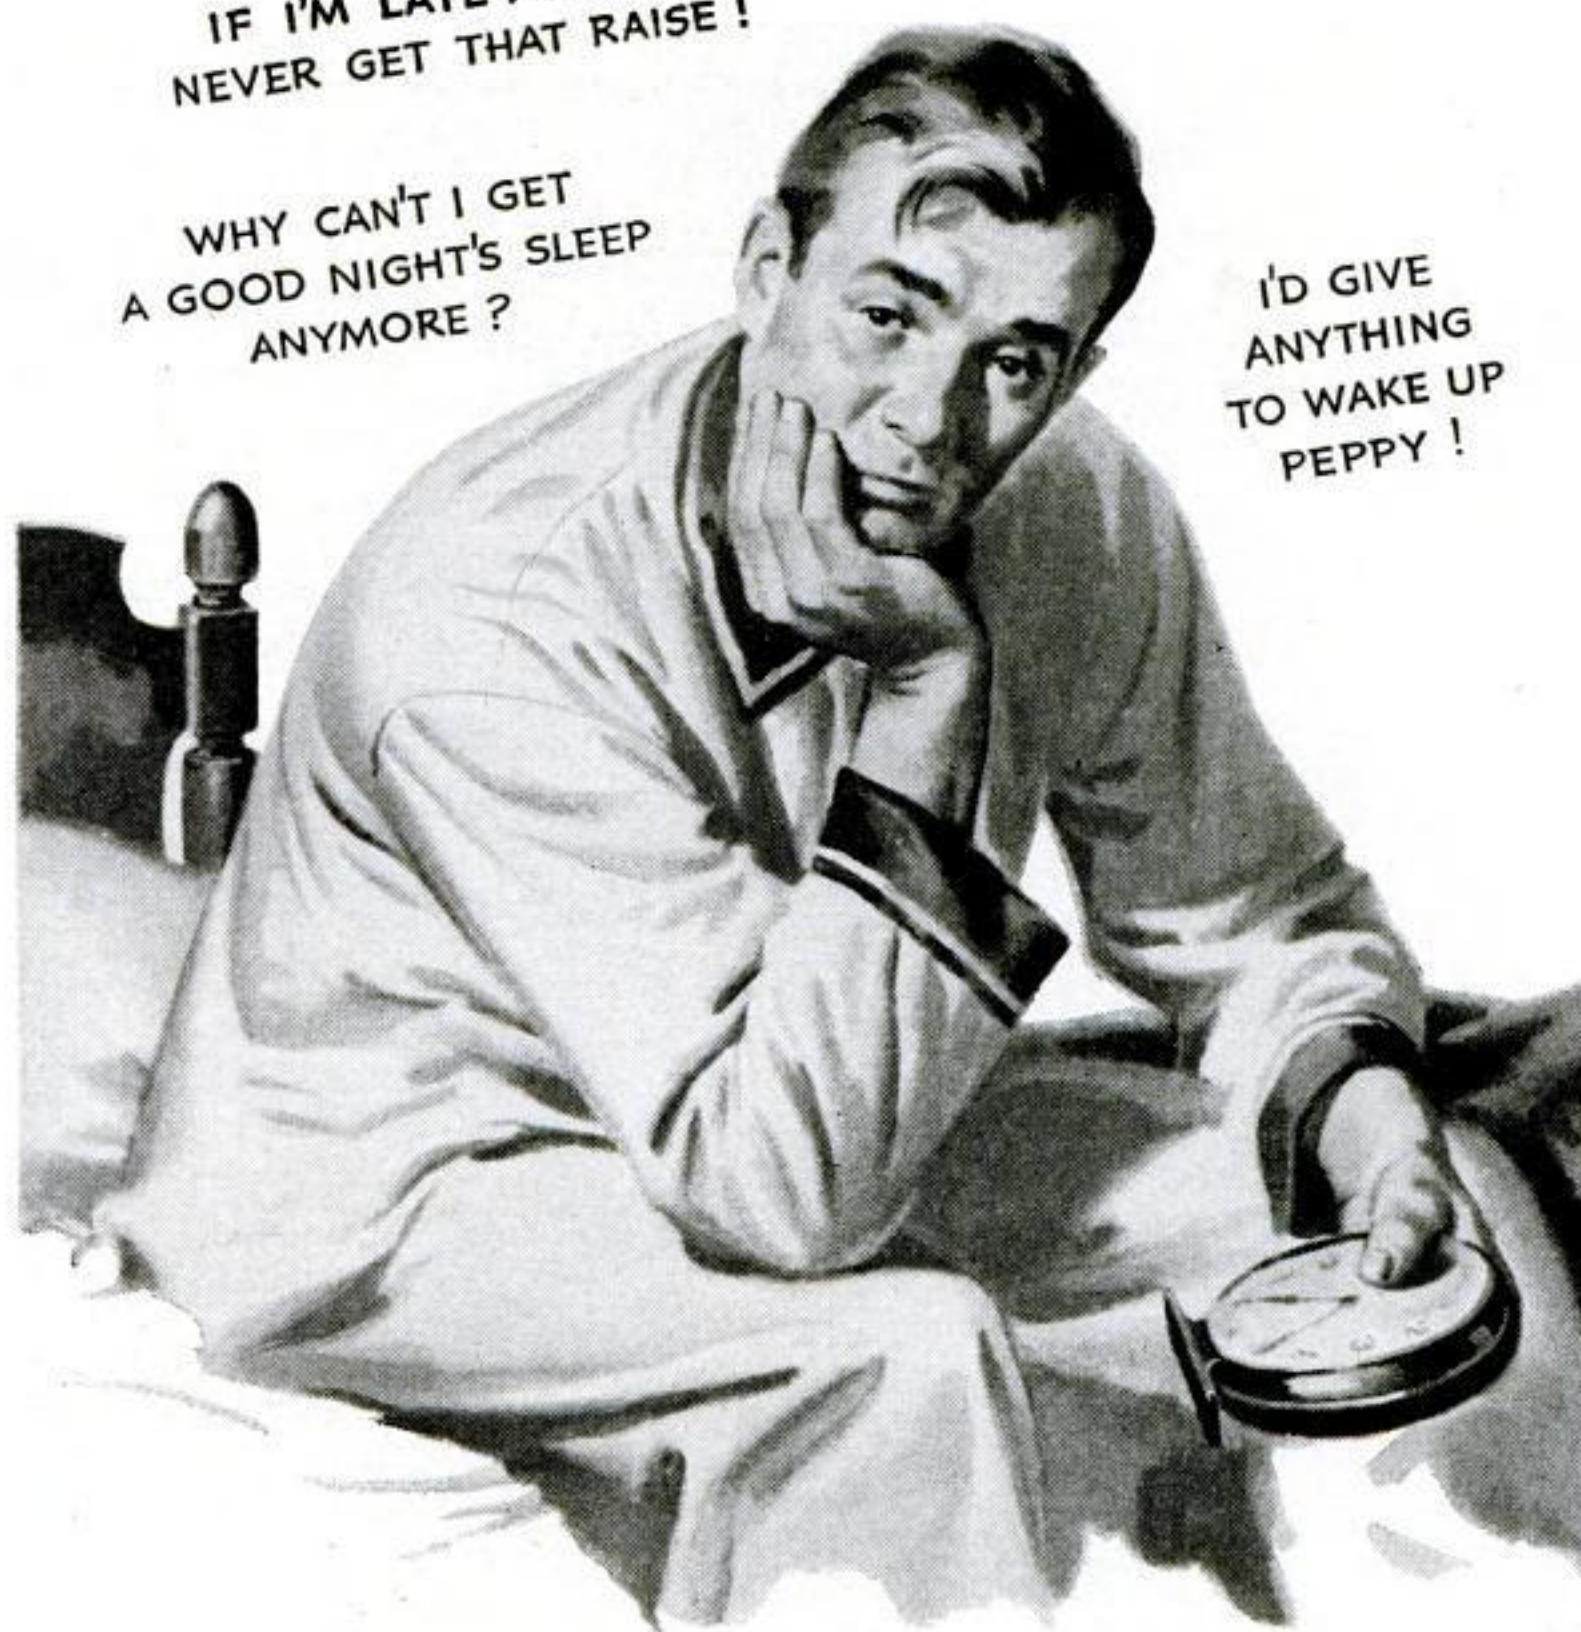

INSPECTOR MESSANA of Palermo, not far from Giuliano's mountain headquarters, is a bitter man who swears that someday he will get Giuliano.

PLAIN AND SWEET CHOCOLATE FLAVORED

A GOOD NIGHT'S SLEEP IS THE BEST MORNING BRACER!

You never saw

You'll love these luxurious, new wonder-nap blankets in luscious white, or in soft blue, dusty rose, apple green, cedar, peach, and canary yellow. They are full 6 feet wide, giving a generous tuck-in for a double bed. And they have a lustrous, wide, self-color rayon satin binding.

PEPPERELL

Such a Beautiful Blanket

AT SUCH AN AMAZING LOW PRICE!

PEPPERELL makes blanket history by cleverly looming a blanket—a blend of half wool, half rayon—in such a way that the nap (the part that really keeps you warm) is two-thirds wool, one-third "crimped"* rayon. This wonder nap is the secret of the ultra-luxurious value you get for so modest an outlay of cash!

When you feel this blanket... this wonderful new Pepperell blanket... you can hardly believe the price! Pinch the depth of that bouncy nap. Look at the soft, rich shimmer of it in white... or the lush, clear tones in blue, green, canary yellow, dusty rose, cedar, peach. Here is a beautiful blanket that's light and fluffy and warm—warm—WARM! Here is a beautiful, luxurious blanket at a price that even your pocket-book warms to!

It's a PEPPERELL achievement

That nap... that resiliency... that over-all texture so like all-wool, comes from a very special handling of rayon with wool—the result of research by Pepperell technicians during the war. In total construction, the blanket is a blend—half wool, half rayon. But the smart feature is its warmth-hoarding wonder nap, which is two-thirds wool, one-third "crimped"* rayon. Words and pictures can only partially tell you what a value you get in this remarkable new blanket at such a low price. You must see it—feel its depth of nap. See it this week in your favorite store where you get your best values.

So Warm!

When you snuggle down under the fluffy softness of Pepperell's new wonder-nap blanket, you'll know how smart you were to get it! The fibre picture (far right) tells part of the story. A trick of weaving new "crimped" rayon with wool produces the distribution of air cells in the nap that gives depth of insulation. And it's insulation, not weight of covers, that keeps you warm, you know!

Luxurious Thrift!

Now you can afford a beautiful blanket for every bed in your house. How can Pepperell give it to you at such an astonishingly modest price? Because it's half rayon, half wool, cleverly looming to give you snugly warmth at less cost. Praise be to science for its modern wonders! And give your store a quick buzz for this new Pepperell blanket with the warm wonder nap.

*"CRIMPING" does to rayon fibres what a permanent wave does to your hair. This enlarged picture shows you how it rearranges the molecular structure of the straight rayon filaments (1) into the wavy threads you see in (2). This is the bouncy, resilient rayon fibre cleverly looming with wool to make the fluffy, warm wonder nap of Pepperell's new luxury-at-low-cost blanket.

THE WORLD'S LARGEST SELLING PEN

How can this quality pen be sold for 98¢?

A good pen has always been expensive. Most fine pens sell at $5 to $15. But during the last two years a revolution has taken place in the pen industry. War-developed precision tooling and mass production methods have enabled B•B craftsmen to turn out a handsomely styled, top-quality pen for 98¢.

The B•B is making pen history

B•B's decision to sell many pens at a small profit instead of fewer pens at a large profit is making pen history. Accountants, school children, bank executives, carpenters and clerks are buying B•B pens at the rate of more than one million every month.

Why do 1 million people a month buy a B•B pen?

1. NO BETTER WRITING MECHANISM has ever been made at any price. Chrome steel ball floats inside tip with less than 1-10,000 inch tolerance... rolls freely, writes freely.

2. WON'T SKIP, SCRATCH, CLOG OR BLOT. B•B has solved all the problems which plagued early ball point penmakers.

3. A WORKING PEN that's dependable every time. The B•B writes at any angle, writes far smaller figures than a conventional pen.

4. EXCLUSIVE "PERMA-DRI" INK needs no blotting, rolls on dry. Developed for B•B pens exclusively. The ink cartridge contains enough ink to write a line 18 miles long.

5. WRITES AS EASILY AS A PENCIL. Ideal for schoolwork, office or household. Get a B•B today!

Guarantee Compare the B•B with any other pen regardless of price. You too will say it's the finest writing pen you've ever tried. Every B•B pen is given a mechanical, visual and writing check before leaving the factory. Every pen is backed by an all-time service guarantee. KICKING UP A SPRAY OF SNOW, SKI PROFESSIONAL OLOF RODEGARD SWINGS HIS SKIS INTO THE AIR ON A JUMP TURN

Skiing

An Oregon resort enjoys its biggest season

PHOTOGRAPHS FOR LIFE BY RALPH CRANE

Once again northern U.S. is echoing to the slap of skis, the buzz of ski tows and the uninhibited talk of "vorlage," "schusses" and wax. At Timberline Lodge, halfway up Oregon's 11,245-foot Mt. Hood, the skiing season is already in its fourth month. The first snow flew back in September. Now the rocks are covered, the gullies are filled and the beginners are grimly snowplowing down the gentle slopes in their new department-store outfits. The ski pros are back, whizzing through slalom gates and making fancy turns (above). All day the skiers go whooping and hollering down the mountainside—and occasionally a stretcher comes back up. At night Timberline's six huge fireplaces sear the soles of new moccasins while the snow deadened air carries the drinking songs into the canyon below. It looks like the best season yet.

This bustle, at Timberline as at every other ski resort, is the manifestation of a winter light-headedness that has swept the U.S. with the virulence of a disease. For all its virulence the disease is comparatively new. Fifteen years ago the sport was confined to a few skiers willing to trudge back up the hill. Today there are more than three million of them swarming down over the landscape from Maine to Oregon, making millions of dollars for manufacturers of ski equipment but hurting no one but themselves.

Timberline

Its snow is 15 feet deep, its chair lift a mile long

Timberline Lodge has one of the longest ski seasons in the U.S. From November through April it is half buried under 15 feet of snow. Every weekend during these six months it is overrun by 5,000 skiers who pour in by automobile and bus from the nearby population centers of Portland and Seattle. Skiers speckle the mountainside like pepper on a dazzling white tablecloth, and the pine-paneled lobby of the main lodge is as busy as the floor of the New York Stock Exchange. There is a mile-long chair lift (opposite) and, within 200 yards of the main lodge, three rope tows which pull the skiers up gentle, steep or precipitous slopes. Below the lodge four separate ski trails wind $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles downhill through the dense fir forests. Twice a day Timberline's two full-time instructors give ski lessons (cost: \$2 each), and naive beginners usually start out by asking, "How high do you jump?" The instructors patiently explain that jumping is a highly skilled specialty and that less than one out of a hundred skiers ever does it at all. Like all other ski resorts, Timberline Lodge suffers from overcrowding; from the popcorn machine to the ski lifts, nothing is adequate. The business is simply more than the facilities can handle. But no resort managers are complaining. They expect to do a \$150 million business this winter.

A NOON SNACK takes place 7,000 feet above sea level at Silcox hut. Crowd includes both the lodge guests and weekend skiers, who ride up on the chair lift and pause occasionally for hamburgers and coffee before putting on their skis and flying down the mountainside course, which is nicknamed "Magic Mile."

CHAIR LIFT, which Merrie Douna (above) rides in comfort, her skis already fastened, cost $80,000 to build in 1937. It starts at timber line, runs up into vast fields of unsheltered snow. Spectacular growth of skiing is shown by the fact that as recently as 1933 there was not one ski tow in the U.S. Now there are about 1,000.

EVEN IN SNOWSTORMS skiers are out. Here one ascends Mt. Hood by way of Salmon River rope tow. It skirts a canyon, is steepest of Timberline's three tows.

BEGINNERS' SLOPE is covered with skiers in spite of the bad weather, which rarely drives even them inside the lodge. Beginners fall and flounder a lot, seldom are injured when they remain on gentle slopes like this one. But some beginners quickly acquire a false sense of balance, then become overconfident and start hurtling down steep slopes at breakneck speeds. These foolish "schussboomers" are the people who crash into trees and take spectacular cartwheel falls.

"SNOW BUNNIES" (beginners) descend a trail in the forest below Timberline Lodge. To check their speed they use the snowplow technique, leaning forward, bending their knees and forcing the tips of their skis inward. Any experienced skier on an easy slope like this would zip down past them with disdainful ease.

SLALOM RACE, in which skier makes a series of turns between flagged poles, is part of Far Western Kandahar, a competition held annually near Timberline.

"SNOW CAT," a tractorlike contrivance, is used to service the ski facilities and to drag ambitious skiers like these to the high fields of snow above the tows.

DOWN THE ROOF go four skiers who glide over a huge snowdrift that buries one complete side of the hut at the lower terminus of the Timberline chair lift.

SUNBATHERS strip to shorts and a sweater or halter and sit in the snow. Temperature is 28° but sun's rays are so strong that the girls must use sun-tan oil.

CAMPING OUT, Dave Morris (left) and Fred Meberg use pup tent. They cooked meals on a portable stove, cut the cost of their week's ski vacation to $18 each.

AT NIGHT the peak of Mt. Hood, an inactive volcano still exuding vapors, forms a ghostly backdrop for the low, sprawling skiing lodge. The moon, softer than the glaring spots of light from the windows, throws long shadows of the fir trees across snow churned up during the day by countless skiers. But the temperature is 18° above and the air, without the sun, is biting, so few skiers venture outside. Occasionally, just before bedtime, a few rugged fresh-air addicts find the fireplaces too hot and duck out to flounder about and get well chilled before turning in for a good night's sleep so that they can start all over again in the morning.

HONEYMOONERS, Elda and Paul Shreve, sit before the big north-side window in the lobby of the skiing lodge to look at Mt. Hood as the late afternoon sun makes the snow sparkle brilliantly. Their courtship was on skis, and they came to Timberline the day of their marriage. Both are art students in Portland.

Indoors

Some skiers spend a lot;
some get by on $35 a week

Timberline Lodge is run on the European plan, i.e., with separate prices for rooms and meals. While affluent skiers spend up to $125 a week, the average cost is about $80. A few, like the girls at lower left, supplement one big meal a day with their own peanut butter and crackers and manage to enjoy themselves on about $35 a week. One advantage of skiing over other vacations is that once room, meals and ski-tow tickets are paid for there is little chance to squander money. The state of Oregon provides thrifty skiers with an added economy: they have to bring their own liquor.

DORMITORY BUNKS cost the six girls above only $2.50 each a night. They drove from Seattle for a week's skiing, brought their own food to save money.

DE LUXE ROOM has fireplace, costs $14 a day. While clothes dry over fire and his wife knits, Rolla Voltstaedt relaxes from skiing by reading a ski magazine.

WINDOW-SILL BAR is provided by 20-foot snowdrifts which reach the level of a third-story room occupied by Erick Lundberg, the Timberline Lodge music director. Above: Gene Vradenburg interrupts her skiing for a few minutes to drink a bottle of beer, which Lundberg has chilled in snow outside his window.

WAXING THEIR SKIS in a dungeonlike room off the lobby, young enthusiasts get ready to try morning snow. Almost every expert has his own waxing technique. Guests are discouraged from taking equipment to their rooms, but the lodge sometimes has trouble with beginners fondly clutching their brand-new skis.

BURNING THEIR SKIS, two casualties rest their broken ankles in plaster casts while their smashed equipment goes up in flames. Robert E. McCooley (facing fire) was hurt during the first hour he had ever been on skis. But he plans to start all over again. About 10 breaks and sprains occur every weekend at Timberline.

BROADWAY CHEERS NEW COMIC STAR

Nancy Walker wows the shlumps

"Afraid of a bunch of New York shlumps? Not me," said Nancy Walker when asked if she was worried about the impending opening of her new musical, Look, Ma, I'm Dancin'. The shlumps, which is what Nancy fondly calls her friends, all came to the opening last month and with wild acclaim showed Nancy that she really didn't have anything to be afraid of. Overnight the 25-year-old actress, who is only 4 feet 11 inches tall and looks like a frightened small fry facing up bravely to the town bully, became the season's newest and brightest star comic. The Times critic called her "the best slapstick comedian of the generation."

Nancy, whose father is Dewey Barto of the noted acrobat team, Barto and Mann, began her theatrical career as a singer of tearful ditties. She was terrible and got fired from every job. By mistake she was invited in 1941 to sing for George Abbott, who thought he was going to hear another singer named Walker. Nancy's serious rendering of "Bounce me, brother, with a solid four" convulsed Abbott and he hired her for his show, Best Foot Forward. Transformed into a comic, Nancy has acted in three more musicals, all of them, including Look, Ma, directed by George Abbott.

In her present role of a Milwaukee beer heiress who supports a ballet company because she wants to be a ballerina herself, Nancy occasionally whoops it up in a big noisy number like I'm Tired of Texas (p. 90), which is the show's hit song and ought to be popular in 47 states. But usually she acts with a kind of muted frenzy as if she were stealing apples from a pushcart. "You gotta be careful how you do a part," she says gravely, "or you can be an awful hambone."

Aside from a few squats Nancy is perpetually on her feet and regards Look, Ma, I'm Dancin' as a real bonecrusher. Last summer she acted briefly in a straight play and was amazed by its advantages. "My God," she observed, "in a straight play you can eat, smoke and drink tea and not have to wait for some guy in the pit to give you the pitch."

A BUSHED BALLERINA, Nancy Walker grabs her ankles in a pose that parodies ballet dancers painted by Edgar Degas. Nancy studied ballet for more than a year so she would know how to make fun of dances accurately.

AS AN ASPIRING DANCER who buys her way into a ballet company, Nancy Walker (left) chugs along like a caboose at the end of a train of nymphs.

FOUR POSITIONS of ballet are rehearsed by Nancy in hopes that she will be allowed to dance in Swan Lake. But all she achieves is hilarious clumsiness.

DANCING AT LAST, Nancy is so thrilled to find herself rehearsing with a pair of airy dryads that she yowls with delight and waves wildly to her friends.

"I'M TIRED OF TEXAS"

Hit song in Look, Ma is sung by Nancy to indicate boredom with a state whose inhabitants perpetually shout its praises. Below: some verses.

VERSE

I used to think the states were forty-eight,
But there is one that really shouldn't rate:
Too dry and too wet, too;
I thought I'd let you know.
It's got a reputation for its size,
Ho-ho-ho-ho, but that's the only claim I recognize.
Too cold and too hot, too,
It's really got to go Back to Mexico.

CHORUS

I'm tired of Texas,
So tired of Texas.
I'm gonna head out, spread out
Away from Texas.
I'm so darn fed up
That I can hardly hold my head up.
I'm gonna say goodbye so proudly, loudly
I'll wake the dead up . . .
Though I am callous,
And dull of malice towards Dallas,
The spot I'd really hate to roost in,
Or be seduced in,
Is Houston . . .
You hear me howling,
I'll soon be prowling,
I'm gonna light out,
Right out,
And never more stray,
'Cause it's the rear end
Of the U.S.A.

ANTI-TEXAS sentiments are bellowed by Nancy. When Texas' Governor heard of song he said composer must be "allergic to beauty, bigness and vigor."

“That’s what I call real beer...

that smooth exquisite taste.
None of the harsh bitterness.

WRESTLING PLAYED STRAIGHT

U.S. college teams do without any phony histrionics, and tiny Cornell of Iowa holds the championship

Professional wrestling in the U.S. has degenerated into ludicrous exhibitions of ham acting wherein the contestants have become mere performers who rely principally on phony grunts and yowls of simulated pain. But promoters defend this sort of vaudeville on the theory that an honest wrestling match is likely to be so dull that nobody wants to see it.

At Mount Vernon, Iowa, however, sports fans regularly pack a college gymnasium to see perfectly legitimate wrestling in which science and skill replace professional histrionics. Mount Vernon is the home of Cornell College, a Methodist institution whose wrestling team is champion of the National Collegiate Athletic Association and also of the U.S. Amateur Athletic Union. Cornell has a student body of only 800, but since 1945 its wrestlers have not been beaten in 33 consecutive dual meets with much larger colleges and universities. Forced to go outside Iowa for suitable competition, Cornell has defeated West Point's wrestling team six straight times and last month warmed up for a defense of its national collegiate championship by administering a sound thrashing to the Big Nine champions of the University of Illinois (above). Having placed one wrestler on each of the last three U.S. Olympic teams, Cornell this year expects to place two men—121-pound Richard Hauser, who has lost only one match out of 100, and 135-pound Lowell Lange, who has now won 88 bouts in a row.

CORNELL

THE CORNELL VARSITY poses (above) with Coach Paul K. Scott. In 9 dual meets this season Cornell has scored 240 points to 29 for the opposition, winning 63 matches and losing only nine. Coach Scott, a Cornell alumnus, captained the wrestling team in 1929. Below, he directs the squad of 46 in its daily two-hour workout.

MAYHEM IS ILLEGAL

In professional wrestling almost anything is legal. In college the most dangerous holds are outlawed. Five bonebreakers, all familiar to professional wrestling fans but illegal in colleges, are demonstrated below by members of the Cornell team.

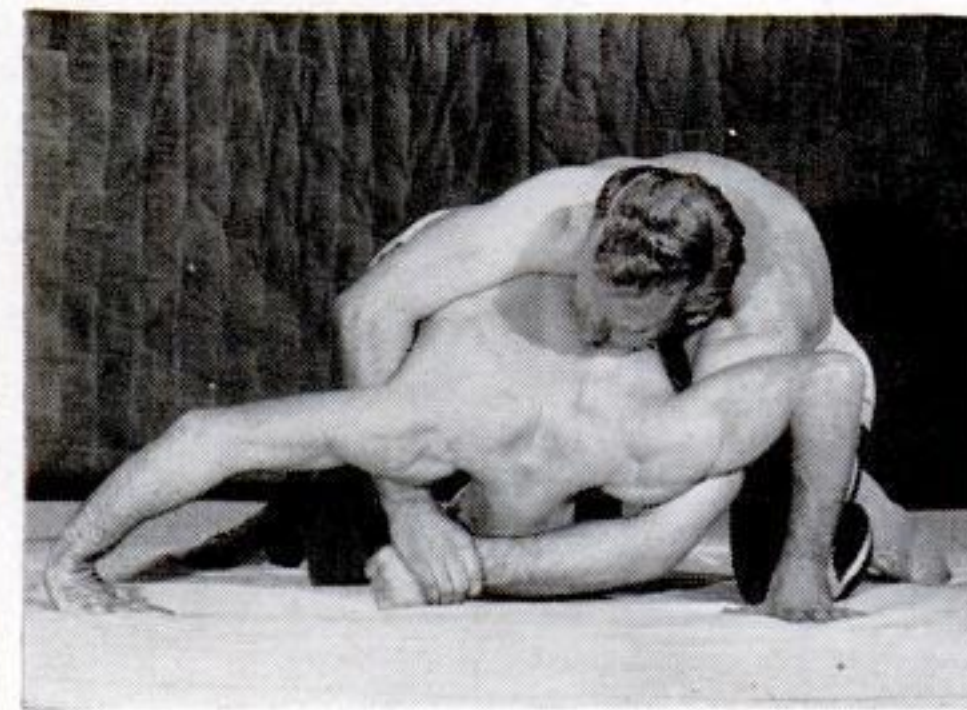

BODY SLAM is illegal when executed standing up (above), is legal when wrestler touches one knee to mat.

GOUGING of mouth, nose or eyes is forbidden. So is the retaliatory "over scissors" by man being gouged.

TWISTING HAMMERLOCK is applied by coach, who mugs like a professional as he puts on the pressure.

FULL NELSON is favorite hold of fictional ape-man Tarzan, who uses it to snap necks of gorillas and lions.

CORNELL VICTORY OVER ILLINOIS

RETAINING ADVANTAGE, Hauser fastens a reverse bar arm on Ryan's arm, tries to roll him over and slam shoulders to mat for required two seconds.

MATCH IS OVER as the referee counts two. Each bout has three three-minute periods. Victory by a fall is worth five points, by decision, three points.

A YOUNG MOTHER, PHYSICALLY ILL AND DEEPLY DISTRESSED ABOUT HER APPROACHING DIVORCE, COMES TO THE LAFARGUE CLINIC TO ASK FOR ADVICE AND HELP

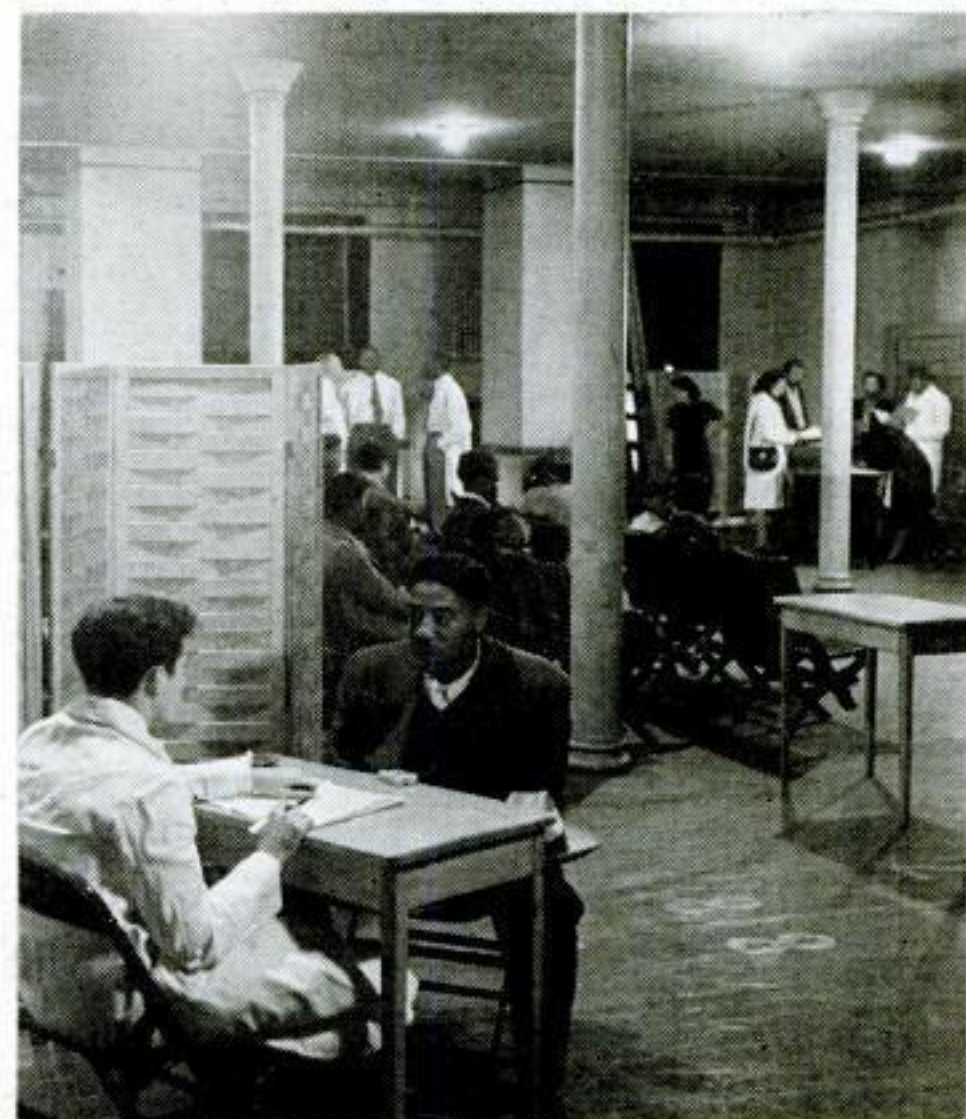

CLINIC FOR SICK MINDS

BASEMENT OF A HARLEM CHURCH IS HAVEN FOR THE MENTALLY ILL

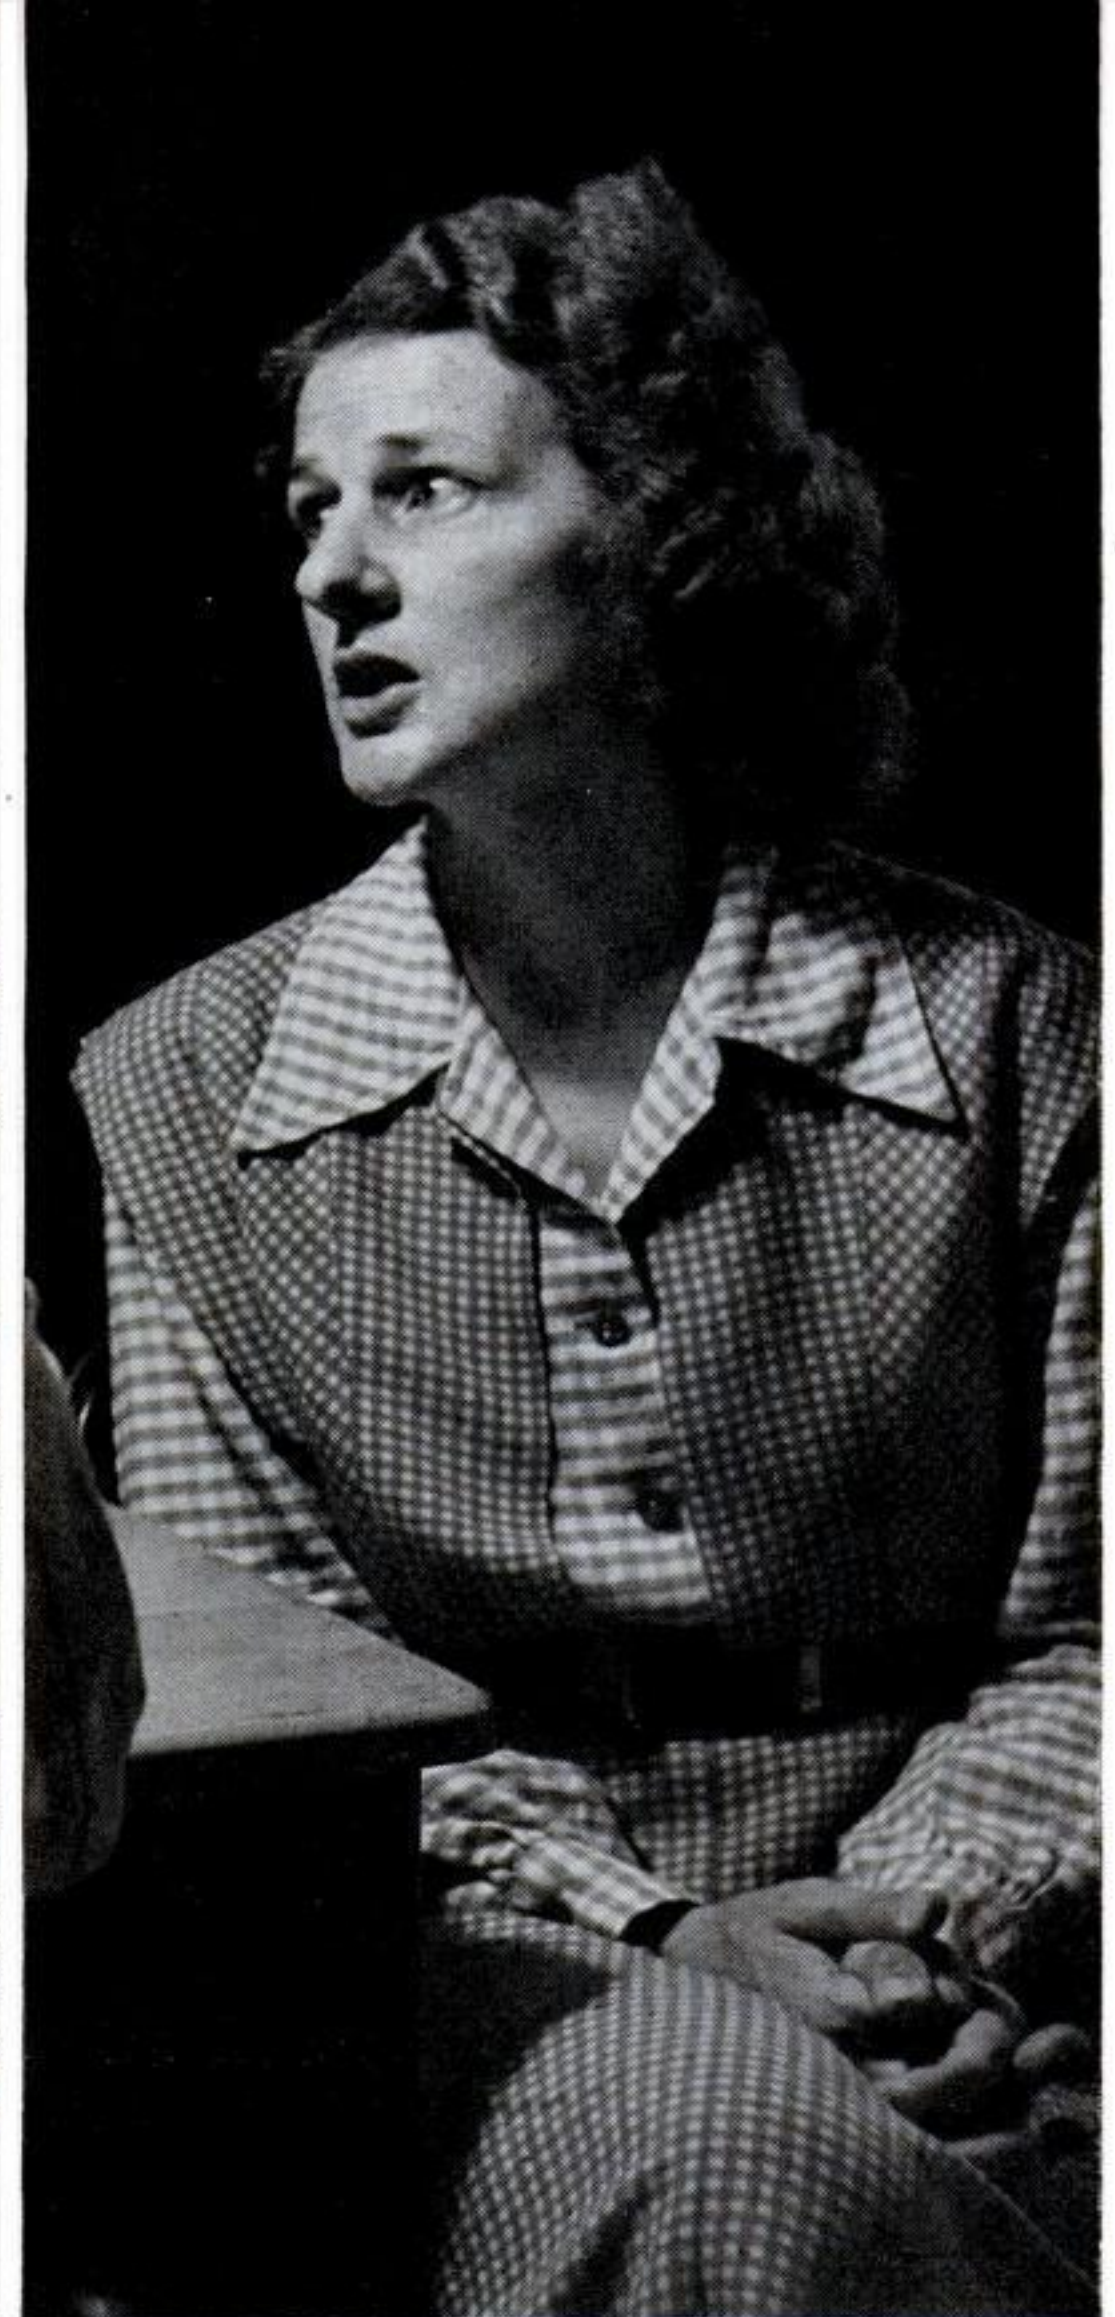

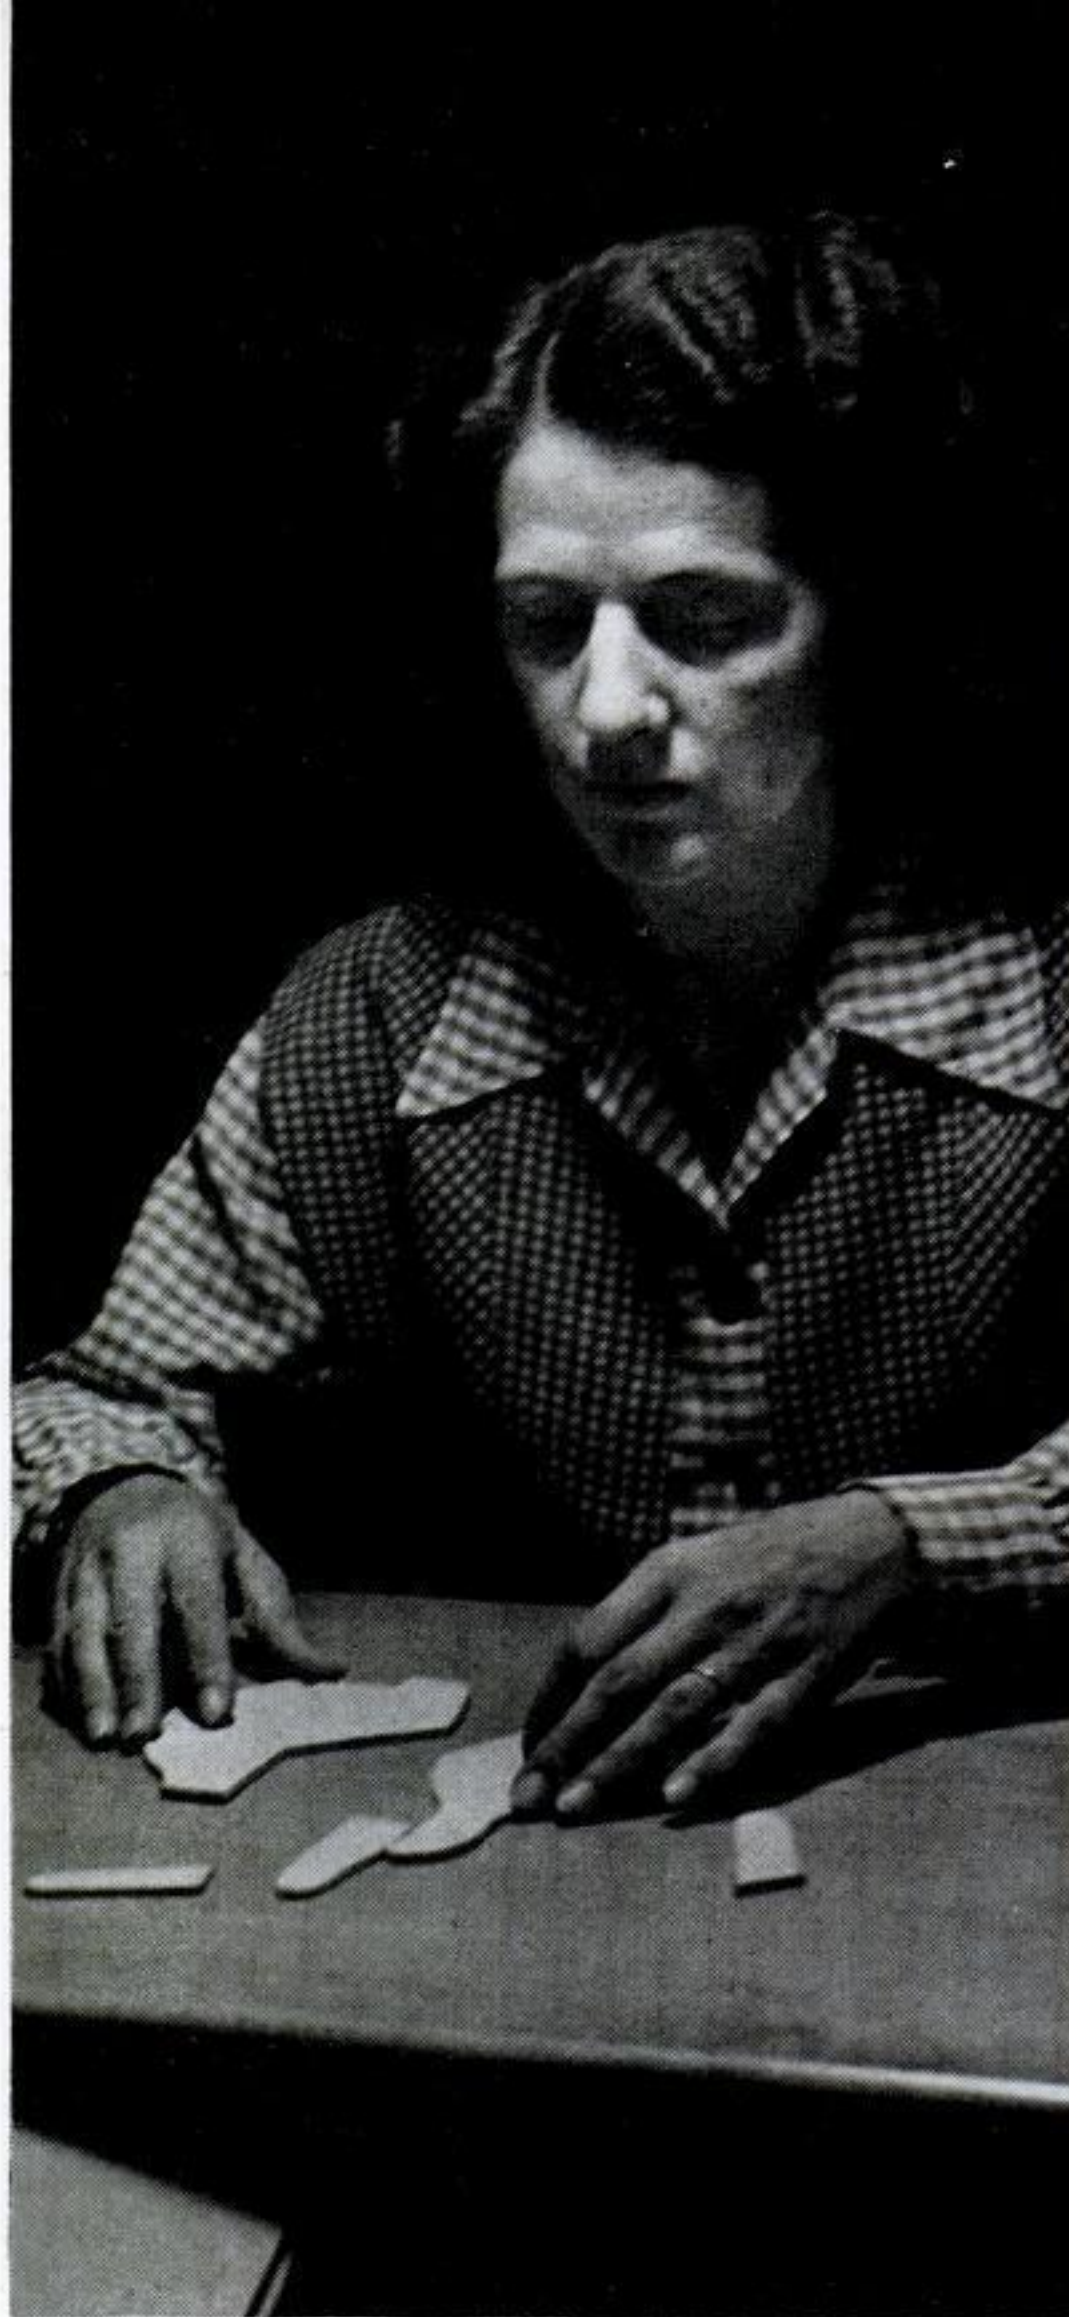

In the sparsely furnished basement of Harlem's St. Philip's Parish House, a famous psychiatrist and a staff of 15 specialists have set up a clinic to treat the sick minds so common in that poverty-ridden community. The clinic's patients are as varied as the Harlem population: a little Negro boy whose mind was scarred by the sight of his family dying in a tenement fire; a Puerto Rican laborer tortured by imaginary voices in the night; a white housewife driven to insanity and murder (next page). No reference or introduction is necessary. People wander in from the street to ask for help.

The Lafargue Clinic, named in honor of a French Negro humanitarian, is a new kind of institution.

It is dedicated to the idea that sickness of the mind afflicts rich and poor alike and that expert mental care should be available to all men and not confined to the few who can afford to pay. The clinic's director, Psychiatrist Fredric Wertham, has found a way to provide such care. With a staff of volunteers, rent-free quarters and the tiny contributions of the very poor, he can offer the best of treatment to those who need it most—at 25¢ a visit. The skepticism of New York welfare officials that long delayed his plans has given way to respect. For although this one clinic cannot begin to fill the need for its services, its success has proved that the need exists and has shown a way of meeting it.

IN SCREENED BOOTH Negro veteran describes his problems. Other patients (background) wait their turn.

TAKING TESTS AT THE CLINIC BEFORE HER TRIAL, MRS. TILT, TENSE AND DEPRESSED, SAID, "MY BRAINS FEEL LIKE A LOT OF WIRES ALL CROSSED AND MIXED UP"

DURING THE TRIAL Dr. Wertham (right) confers with Mrs. Tilt, lawyers and another psychiatrist (rear).

Dr. Wertham's testimony convinced the jury Mrs. Tilt was temporarily insane when she killed her husband.

CLINIC DEFENDS A WOMAN DRIVEN TO COMMIT MURDER

On April 26, 1947 Mrs. Rosalie Tilt, 42, and the mother of two children, shot and killed her husband. Her lawyers, suspecting that the crime was not a normal one, went to the Lafargue Clinic for help. Mrs. Tilt had no money, but Dr. Wertham and his staff took her case and prepared an insanity defense. They analyzed the circumstances of the crime and presented the following case to the jury:

During her childhood Mrs. Tilt had been deeply attached to her disciplinarian father and at 15 married one of his friends. As before, she lived in a child-father relationship. Her husband died and she was married again, this time to a man who abused her. The habit of childlike dependence had become so strong that she stood this treatment for 15 years. But as time passed, her husband plotted to drive her to insanity and suicide. He almost succeeded. One night, holding the gun he had given her for her own destruction, Mrs. Tilt went to her husband's room to shoot herself before his eyes. As she raised the gun the man goaded her and urged her on. Then, as her instinct of self-preservation broke through her confused submission, she shot her tormentor.

The jury's verdict: "Not guilty" on the grounds of insanity—under most circumstances an order of commitment to an asylum. But the clinic's fine reputation and handling of the case had impressed the court. The judge decided Mrs. Tilt was not dangerous. She was put under the care of Dr. Wertham and his staff and ordered to report regularly to the clinic.

NEIGHBORHOOD SCAMP "Pogie" Ifill stops at parish-house door to talk to Dr. Wertham and the Rev. Shelton H. Bishop, the Episcopal minister who gave Wertham a place for his clinic. Pogie had a reading disability which made school hard for him and he became a chronic truant and an accomplished thief. He brought himself to the attention of the clinic by coming in and stealing a nurse's wallet and taking the money to his invalid mother. But during later visits he came to trust the doctors and to accept the help they offered. His reading has been improved, he is back in school and he no longer steals. His problems have been solved before they could become serious.

NIGHT ROCKET, THE BEST AMERICAN DOG, PUTS HIS LEGS ON THE BIG SILVER LOVING CUP WHICH HE MUST WIN ANOTHER FOUR TIMES IN ORDER TO KEEP IT

BEST U.S. DOG

A blue-coated Bedlington terrier becomes king of canine bluebloods

The king of dogdom in America may come from any of 112 breeds, all blue-blooded families of the Westminster Kennel Club which held its annual show last week in New York's Madison Square Garden. A well-known breed usually wins but this year the thousands of dogs which pranced around the ring, some balking and barking, were nosed out for the first time by a breed called the Bedlington, a blue-coated terrier which looks as much like a lamb as a dog. The winner was Champion Rock Ridge Night Rocket (above), a two-year-old male owned by the William Rockefellers. Night Rocket won admiring glances from the judge for his mincing gait and his pear-shaped head which he held high. A hunting dog, the Bedlington, which supposedly descended a century ago from the fearless Dandie Dinmont terrier and the water-loving Otterhound, retrieves game from the coldest water without flinching. Unlike most shaggy dogs, which lose hair, the Bedlington's coat is nonshedding.

THE CHAMPION PEKINGESE OF AMERICA, 9-YEAR-OLD JAI SON FU (RIGHT), SITS PROTECTIVELY BESIDE HIS 3-MONTH-OLD DAUGHTER WHO IS NAMED STAR RUBY

THE PEKINGESE SHOW ALSO CHOOSES A CHAMP

The big canine catchall at Madison Square Garden came a few weeks after a more private promenade of dogs in New York. This was the annual competition of the Pekingese Club of America. For the fifth year the prize went to Jai Son Fu, who belongs to Mrs. Richard Quigley of Lock Haven, Pa.

Jai Son fitted best the demanding code of Pekingese judges which says that good Pekes "must suggest . . . quaintness and individuality, resemblance to the lion in directness and independence and . . . courage, boldness, self-esteem and combativeness, rather than prettiness, daintiness or delicacy."

He sold peace to an unbeliever

THE dripping black was endless nightmare. Malaria stalked on unseen wings. And close—too close—murder, inc. waited in evil silence... waited for the tell-tale slap of mosquito, for the click of rifle bolt.

It took guts to stay still in that stillness. It took guts, too, to charge through hellfire and grenade a gun-nest into oblivion. But the American Infantryman has been generously endowed with courage ever since he stood on the bridge at Concord. You must admit that, for a man who hates war, he has done right well.

He does not fight for conquest or for loot. He has had little thought or time for glory. Yet—whenever the need arose—he bested every enemy he ever met. He sold peace to people who believed in war—because he proved that the soldier who believes in peace is a better man than the soldier who believes in war.

What's the answer, then? Let's say it's because the American is free to think and do and believe as he pleases. Freedom is his birthright. Perhaps that's why he's ready to fight for it. Maybe that's the reason he's the world's fightingest soldier.

Today, as always, the American Infantryman works for peace. It was not enough that he helped win the victory. Now he's out to make it stick.

There's a great tradition in the Infantry and this Service offers much to the young man who wants to get ahead—good pay... food, clothing, shelter, medical care... travel, and educational opportunity. Get all the details from your nearest U. S. Army and U. S. Air Force Recruiting Station.

NECKLINE BUILD-UP

U. S. women learn how to improve long-ignored areas of neck and back which new fashions have uncovered

SHOULDER BLADES protrude before Helen begins her course of exercises. Posture is listless and awkward.

Many fashionable U.S. women, who have striven too well to look like willowy New York fashion models, now find themselves just too skinny to wear the New Look gracefully. Strapless bathing suits and low-necked dresses put too much emphasis on just the things they thought they would never need—full bosoms and filled-out shoulder areas. Last week at least one worried young woman had found the answer. Pretty Helen Tynan, a Conover model with a somewhat skinny look (above, left), invested in a course of body development which gave her eight new pounds mainly around the neck, collarbone and shoulders (above, right). All this was accomplished at a New York school of musical therapy managed by a well-proportioned lady named Claire Mann. Under Miss Mann's tutelage Helen increased her diet and took a series of strenuous exercises which helped to improve her awkward posture and to strengthen the muscles she needed to keep the bones of her back and upper chest from protruding unfashionably. Although she accomplished all these feats with professional assistance, Helen feels that any girl, equipped with straight chair, two filmy scarves and some gently rhythmic music, can do almost as well.

SIX WEEKS LATER the upper back has been filled out and the unattractive shoulder blades have receded.

CHAIR-RUNG EXERCISE begins in sitting position, with feet on rung and hands grasping back of chair. Girl then arches body (above), keeping elbows back, legs straight as possible. Exercise develops muscles of the upper chest.

SCARF ROUTINE improves muscle tone in upper arm, shoulders, chest and back. Waving scarves to tune of boogie-woogie music, Helen Tynan soon loses herself in the rhythm. This exercise also helps to add fullness and raises bust.

RELAXING TO MUSIC for three minutes between some exercises, Helen obeys Miss Mann's instructions to imagine herself "lying in deep grass in a beautiful garden." Then she gets up and goes to the exercises with renewed vigor.

THE FATE OF CIVILIZATIONS is presented by Toynbee in an arresting metaphor which is illustrated above. Here the historian sees all mankind as on a mountainside. Lying on a ledge are the world's dead civilizations which had climbed from depths where they were once subhumans and primitive men. Resting on another ledge are primitive societies which have never become civilized but, being still alive, could develop further. Stranded on minor peaks, unable to climb higher, are five "arrested" civilizations. Three of these, Eskimo, Nomadic and Polynesian, are still alive. Five civilizations are still climbing. Healthiest is our Western civilization, the only one making any progress.

A STUDY OF HISTORY

A brilliant English thinker named Toynbee sees the past in terms of the challenges and responses that make and break civilizations

A SPARE, blue-eyed Englishman named Arnold J. Toynbee was scheduled to arrive in the U.S. this week. He was headed for the Institute for Advanced Study (LIFE, Dec. 29) at Princeton, where he will resume work on one of the most ambitious chores the human brain has ever undertaken, his monumental A Study of History. The six volumes of this work so far published, totaling 1,500,000 words, have already had a profound influence on how the English-speaking world thinks about the past and future of its civilization. Toynbee's influence became still wider last year when a one-volume, 617-page abridgment of his work (Oxford University Press, $5) was published. It became and still is a best-seller and its sale—some 200,000 copies to date, a phenomenal number for so erudite a work—is evidence that worrying over the fate of civilization is not confined to a handful of intellectuals.

Toynbee, whose completed Study will run to nine volumes, set himself the enormous task of mastering the whole history of mankind and finding a meaning or pattern in it. Other historians have read a plot into history, but Toynbee's is probably the grandest, subtlest and richest plot so far. Oswald Spengler's gloomy The Decline of the West, for example, bears somewhat the same relation to Toynbee's Study as Marlowe bears to Shakespeare. Like Spengler, who finished his work 30 years ago, Toynbee divides history into "civilizations" and compares the phases of their rise and fall. He counts 21 major civilizations (pp. 120-21). Five are still alive and of these five only one, our own Western civilization, is still relatively healthy. The other four—the Far Eastern (Chinese-Japanese-Korean), the Hindu, the Islamic and the Orthodox Christian (largely Russian)—are weakening and giving way now to the competition of Western civilization. They are, says Toynbee, now being incorporated into a "Great Society" with a Western cast. Most of these 21 civilizations went through a more or less identical pattern of birth, growth, breakdown and disintegration. Why, and to what end? That is Toynbee's main problem.

First of all, Toynbee does not agree with Spengler that civilizations are organisms whose life and course are predestined from their start. Human beings, he says, are mortal, but societies consist merely of the relationships between them and so could theoretically live forever—even though none has so far in the world's history. Toynbee also rejects, on evidence, the theory that civilizations are produced by superior races or by the most favorable environments. Seeking a clue in the great myths, he concludes that the real explanation of why civilizations grow or perish is to be found in the theme of "Challenge-and-Response."

This means that when man's environment provides the right challenge, he responds to it in a way that starts him forward on the path to a civilization. It is not an easy environment—a Garden of Eden—which produces a civilization but one which presents difficulties that tax and prod man so that he develops as a response to the stimulus. An example of successful challenge-

ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE, 59, was born in London, went to Oxford, studied in Greece, was an adviser at peace conference after World War I. In 1922 he began to plan A Study of History, has been working at it ever since while teaching and serving as Director of Studies at the Royal Institute of International Affairs. In 1939 the Study was interrupted by war. Toynbee spent seven years directing research for the British Foreign Office and serving as a principal adviser on the satellite-nation peace treaties. His new post at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N.J. will give him a chance to finish the Study.

and-response is the rise of Egypt out of the once uninhabitable Nile Valley (p. 124).

The path to a civilization's progress is barred by a series of further challenges—of environment, wars, of physical or moral pressures—and the life of each civilization is measured by the number of challenges it successfully meets. Eventually, perhaps while intoxicated by a major victory, the society makes a wrong response to some challenge that besets it, and a "Time of Troubles" ensues. This marks the breakdown of the civilization, the end of its growth period.

The Time of Troubles may last for centuries, but it usually leads to a "Universal State," which imposes order on all the conflicting groups in its society. This is normally heralded by a great conquest and pacification, such as Rome's Augustan dictatorship. The Universal State may also last indefinitely (Egypt's two empires lasted about 2,400 years), but its founding has always been a symptom of the society's disintegration. The people stop following their leaders voluntarily and have to be ruled by force. This stage of decline is accompanied by the "wanderings of peoples," great restless migrations which take place around the borders of the Universal State as they did in Europe in the decline of Rome. Growing less and less satisfied, the proletariat within takes up a new religion, as the Christian Church was nurtured among the dispossessed plebs. "Barbarians" from without press in on the dissolving society. The religion of the "internal proletariat" Toynbee calls a "Universal Church," and it may in turn become the seedbed of a second or "affiliated" civilization. Thus Western civilization grew out of the Greek-Roman via the Universal Church of Christianity, and the Far Eastern civilization of China-Japan-Korea grew out of an earlier Sinic civilization via Buddhism.

Such are the main outlines of the plot which Toynbee discovers for his 21 civilizations. It does not fit them all exactly, and Toynbee is too good a historian to force it where it won't fit. He has been accused of deriving it too exclusively from Greek-Roman civilization, on the study of which he grew up. Nevertheless, as he chases this plot and various subplots through the endless maze of other civilizations, Toynbee's insights, metaphors and correlations give a dazzling meaning to the whole life of man.

One of the best-known metaphors in the Study describes civilizations as being on a mountainside (opposite page), up which they have climbed from the depths of subhumanity. Most of the civilizations are lying dead on a ledge. A few arrested civilizations are on nearby peaks. Five are still climbing, our own Western civilization in the lead. In this metaphor Toynbee states his faith in progress: "All the primitive societies which we now observe at rest must have once been in motion; and all societies which have entered upon the process of civilization will come to rest sooner or later in one way or another. Some may eventually come to rest by attaining (though none has attained it yet) the goal of human endeavors: the mutation of Man into Superman. . . . The heights that tower above us are quite beyond our powers of estimation, but we have some inkling of the dizzy depths below."

THESE ARE TOYNBEE'S

Egyptiac civilization sprang up after 4000 B.C. in response to the challenge of Nile "jungle-swamps" (p. 124). Its zenith was 2900 B.C. when it is believed Sphinx and pyramids (right) were built. After this feat, says Toynbee, Egypt's decline began. Instead of immortalizing themselves, the pharaohs should have provided a better livelihood for their subjects.

SUMERIC

This civilization began after 4000 B.C., when a change in climate made the Tigris-Euphrates Valley habitable. Its famous ruler was Hammurabi, whose legal code still lives in the expression: "An eye for an eye. . . ." Its Universal State, which may have extended into India, broke up after the death of Hammurabi in 1905 B.C. Right: a Sumeric relief.

HITTITE

This grew up around 1500 B.C. on the northwestern borders of the collapsing Sumeric civilization. The big-nosed Hittites wrote five languages in cuneiform script. After 1352 B.C. they engaged in wars with the Egyptians, and were then overwhelmed by the same wanderers that broke up the Minoan civilization of Crete (below). Right: Hittites kill a lion.

BABYLONIC

This civilization, which grew on the site of the Sumeric civilization about 1500 B.C., centered in the Tigris-Euphrates Valley and met its Time of Troubles after 700 B.C. when Assyrian warriors (frieze at right) ". . . came down like a wolf on the fold." Later Cyrus of Persia took Babylon into his empire and released the Jews from their Babylonian captivity.

INDIC

India's early civilization had its birth about 1500 B.C. in the challenge of clearing the luxuriant vegetation of the Ganges Valley. This culture produced the Vedas, India's sacred scriptures. The Buddha (right) died during the Indic Time of Troubles (cir. 483 B.C.). Two Universal States lasted until about 475 A.D., about the time Hellenic civilization died.

HINDU

This is one of five living civilizations. It grew from the Indic after the Huns had overrun northwestern India before 800 A.D. Hindu religion supplanted the Buddhism of its predecessor. Destructive internal wars caused breakdown and two conquerors founded its Universal State, the Moguls and then the British. Right: a Hindu temple at Bhubaneswar.

MINOAN

This ancient civilization rose in the Aegean islands probably before 3000 B.C. from the challenge of the sea. It became a thalassocracy, a rule of sea lords, and enjoyed a Universal State. Out of its disintegration about 1400 B.C. Greek civilization was born. While comparing this thalassocracy with two later ones—Renaissance Venice and Britain—Toynbee reflected that Britain's rulership of the waves might not last forever either. Right: a Minoan woman.

HELLENIC

Hellenic story is told on pages 122 and 123. Great era of Greek temples (right) came after battle of Salamis. Toynbee says that Athenians' rebuilding temples "displayed a vitality far superior" to post-1918 France. They built new structures, but the French, instead of building a new Rheims, "performed a pious restoration of each shattered stone."

WESTERN

Toynbee is still studying the prospects of his own civilization. It emerged around 700 A.D. out of Hellenic civilization. Its period of growth coincided with the period of power of the Catholic Church (1075–1524). Then the great Gothic cathedrals like Amiens (right) were built. Today Western civilization has penetrated all other living civilizations.

ORTHODOX CHRISTIAN

This sister of Western civilization came out of Hellenic. It was the Byzantine Empire which grew up in the East after the Roman Empire in 395 A.D. had permanently split. Its collapse came with an internal war around 1000 A.D. Later, in 1371, the Ottomans imposed a 400-year peace in the form of an alien Universal State. Right: Byzantine mosaic.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX

This is a Russian cousin of Western civilization, an offshoot of the main Orthodox Christian society. It began around 1000 A.D. and has far outstripped in power its parent civilization. Toynbee does not take its Communist manifestation very seriously. He feels Westernizing has made Russia a member of a growing Great Society. Right: St. Basil's.

SYRIAC

The best-known representatives of this society are Jews and Phoenicians, whose ships are shown at right. They arose after 1400 B.C. following the collapse of Minoan civilization, discovered the alphabet, the Atlantic Ocean and monotheism. Their Time of Troubles started after death of King Solomon in 937 B.C. Persians provided Syriac Universal State.

ARABIC

Its origins were Syriac—the Syriac of the Baghdad Caliphate (Harun-al-Raschid), which the Arabic Mamelukes restored in Cairo in 1250 A.D. In 1517 it merged with Iranic civilization (below) to form present Islamic civilization which extends over the Mohammedan nations of Arabia, Iraq, Egypt, etc. Right: the sacred Ka'ba in Mecca's Great Mosque.

IRANIC

Like the Arabic civilization above, this one, familiar through the Rubaiyat as the Persia of Omar Khayyam, grew out of Syriac society. At its height it was "a vast, vague, ephemeral shape." It was still growing when it conquered Syria and Egypt in 1517 A.D. and thereby merged with the Arabic to form the Islamic civilization. Picture at right shows the famous 15th Century royal mosque, Masjid-i-Shah, built by Shah Abbas I in Isfahan, onetime capital of Persia.

21 MAJOR CIVILIZATIONS

SINIC

The earliest Oriental civilization grew up in the Yellow River basin around 1500 B.C. in response to the challenge of marshland plus extremes of temperature. It grew for nearly a thousand years and its rulers began the Great Wall. Its great philosopher was Confucius (right). Its Universal State lasted until barbarians pushed across Great Wall about 175 A.D.

FAR EASTERN

This still-living civilization was born in China out of ruins of Sinic civilization before 500 A.D. from the Universal Church of Buddhism. Its great leaders were the Mongols under Kublai Khan who set up a semblance of a Universal State, the Mings who developed great art and the Manchus who finally established universal peace. Right: Ming statues.

FAR EASTERN IN JAPAN

This is an offshoot or a part of Far Eastern civilization, which got started after 500 A.D. Its growth period lasted until 1184 A.D. Right: a ruler of this period. Perry's intrusion found Japan far in decay. In 1868 the Meiji revolution gave rule of Japan to its emperors, and the civilization, once hostile to Western society, was presently swallowed by it.

ANDEAN

The South American civilization originated sometime before 500 A.D. from the challenge of the bleak Andean plateau and the hot, dry Pacific coast. The coast peoples brought water from the plateau and plateau peoples built retaining walls to safeguard their scant soil. The brilliant Inca Empire was ended by the Spanish in 1530. Right: Inca figures.

MAYAN

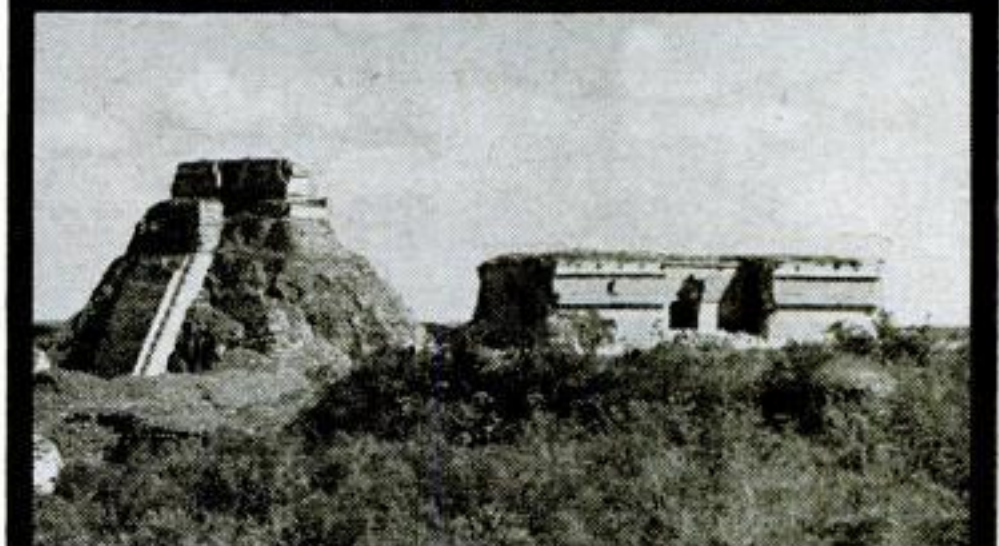

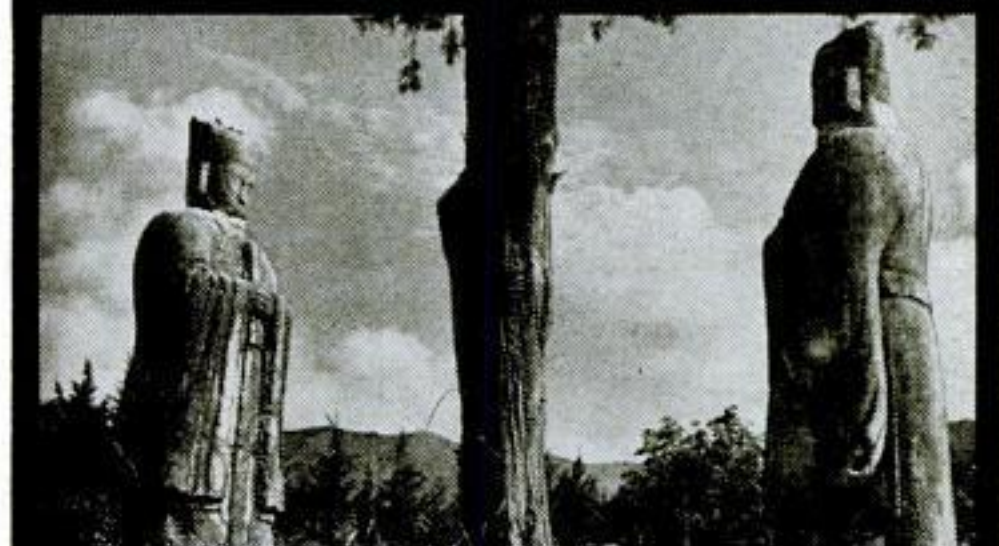

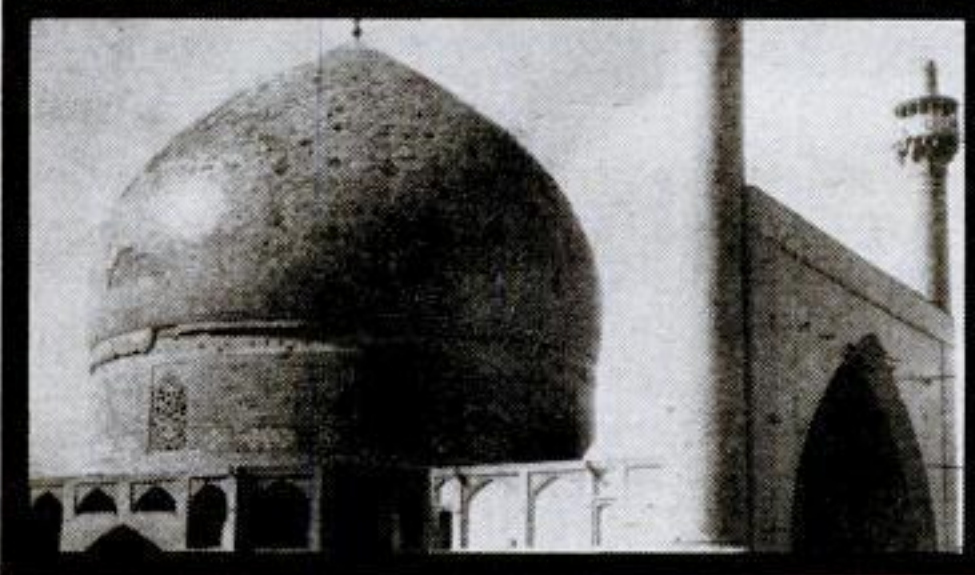

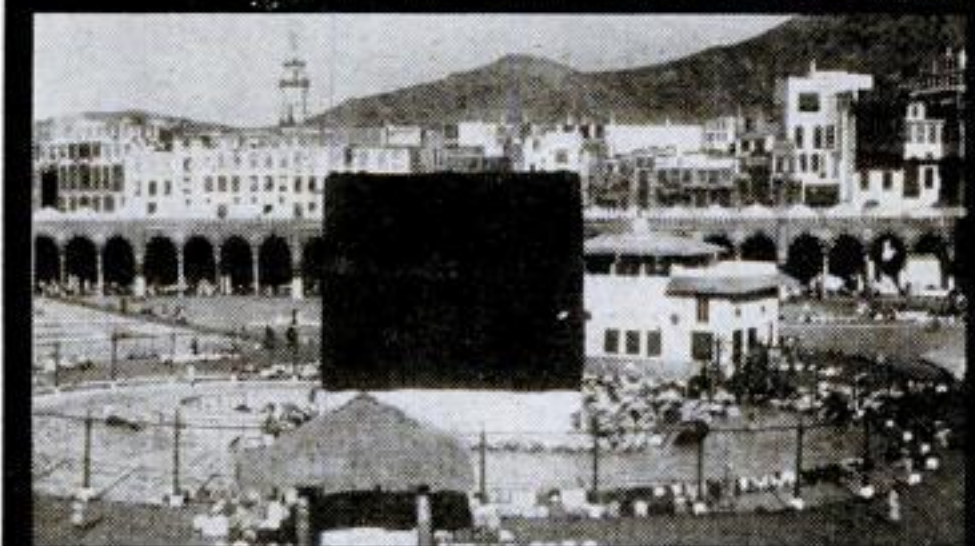

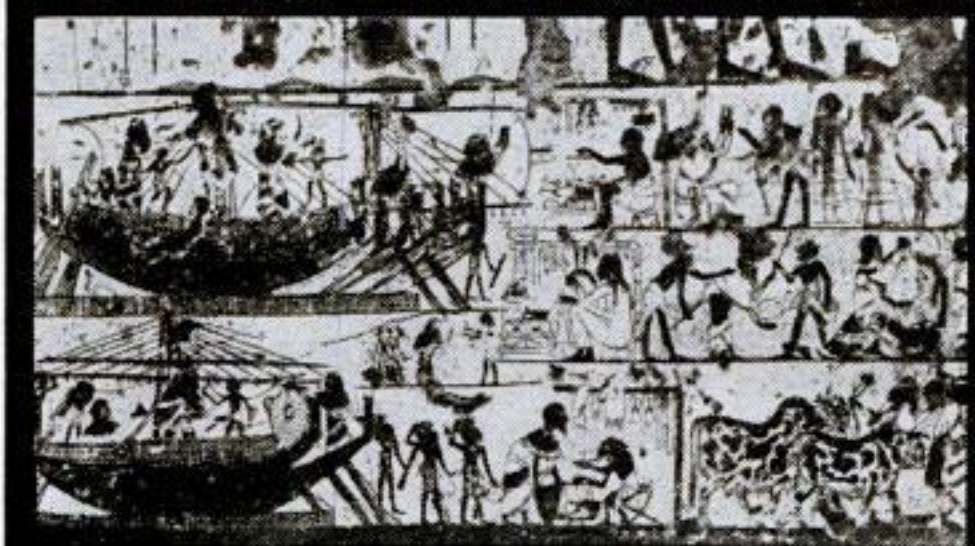

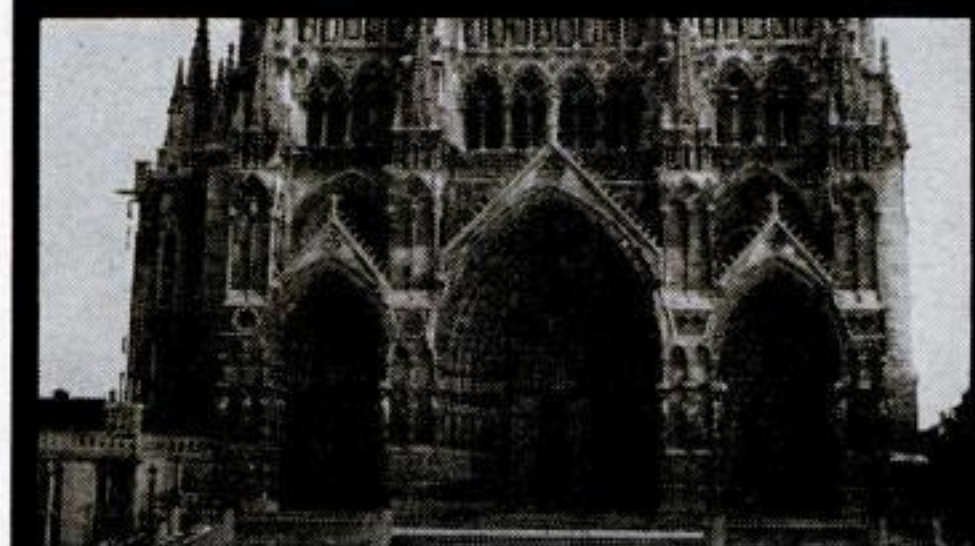

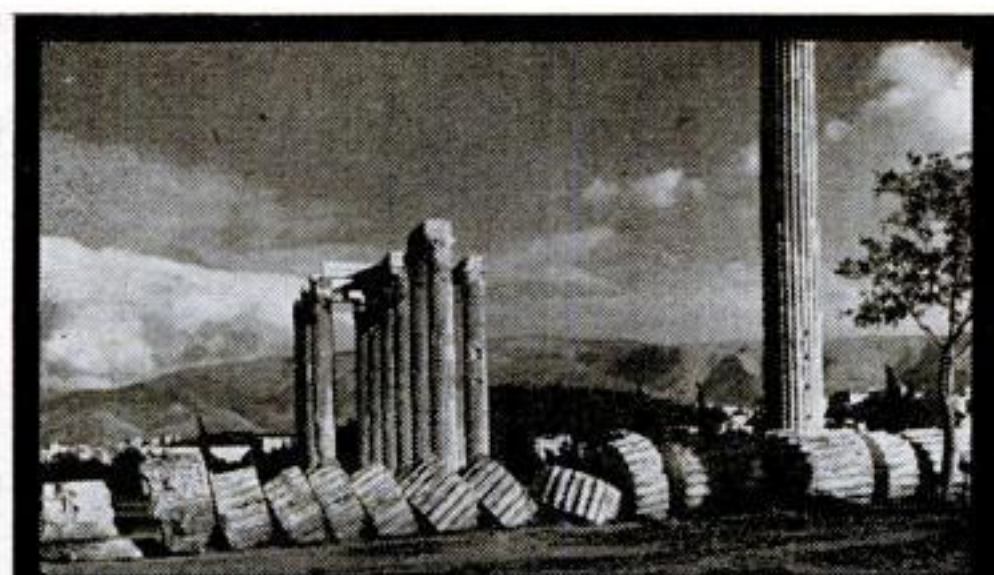

This civilization dates from after 1000 B.C., mastered astronomy. Like the Indic, it was a response to the challenge of overluxuriant tropical growth. According to S. G. Morley (LIFE, June 30), the collapse of Mayan civilization was caused by the failure of its corn economy. Toynbee thinks this may be a possible explanation. Right: Mayan sculpture.

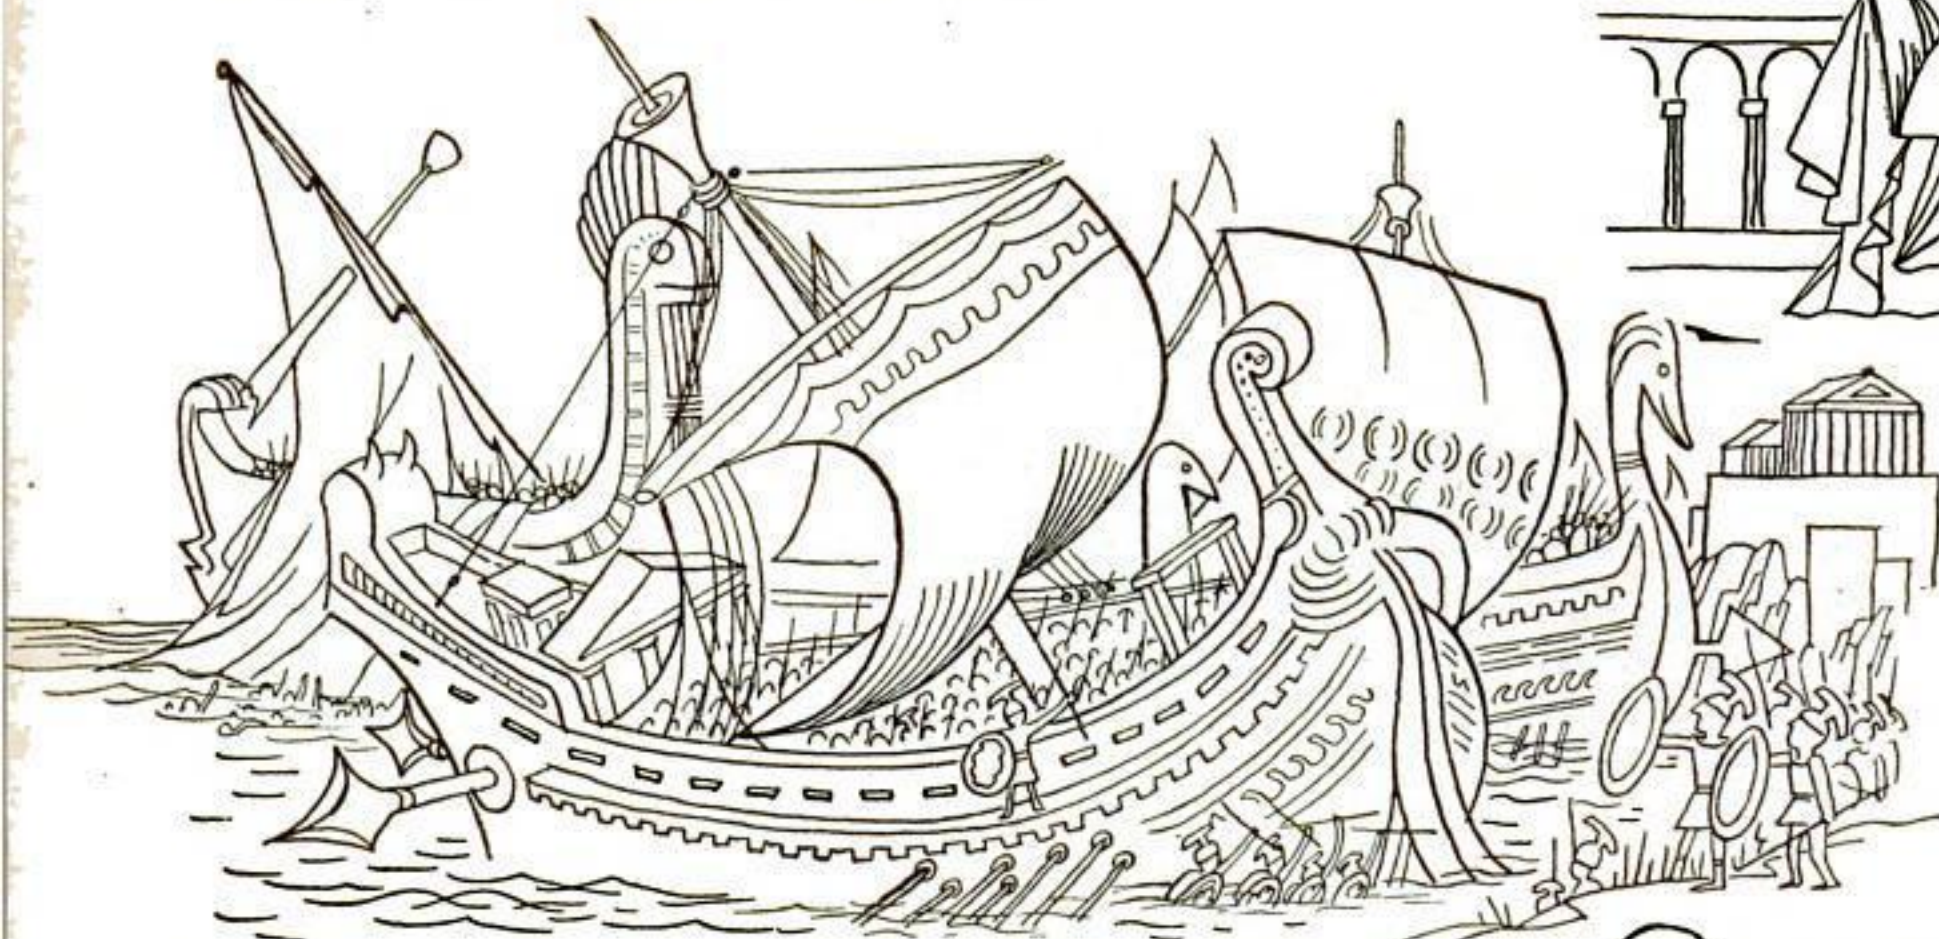

YUCATEC

Refugees from the Mayan decline in the Eighth Century A.D. (above) moved to the Yucatan Peninsula, tried again, meeting the challenge of a dry region. They erected the great buildings at Uxmal (right). Wars between Yucatec cities weakened the society, which about 1200 came under domination of Toltecs from the neighboring Mexic civilization (below).

MEXIC

This civilization's conquest of the Yucatec resulted in a single Central American civilization which endured its Time of Troubles from 1200 until the advent of Spaniards in 1521. Montezuma's Aztecs had all but erected a Universal State when Cortez and his band of adventurers imposed an alien version, in form of the "Spanish Viceroyalty of New Spain." This lasted until 1821 when Mexico declared its independence. Right: sculptured Aztec head.

HELL CIVILI RISE AND FALL OF GROWTH 1125-431 B.C.

Most people think of Greece and Rome as two separate civilizations, and of the age of Cicero, Caesar, Augustus and Horace as marking the pinnacle of Roman history, while the age of Pericles and Socrates, or perhaps of Alexander, marks the pinnacle of Greek history. But to Toynbee, Greece and Rome are both parts of one civilization, the Hellenic. It began in Greece following the earlier Minoan civilization in Crete, started its Time of Troubles during the Peloponnesian War when the Roman Republic was still embryonic and was more than 500 years past its prime by the time of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, from the end of whose reign Gibbon dated his story of Rome's decline and fall. Toynbee, whose early love was Greece, has a long quarrel with Gibbon. Had the latter got his dates right, Toynbee feels, he would never have attributed Rome's decline to "the triumph of Barbarism and Religion," since the decline began in Greece long before either Christianity or the barbarian invasions were heard of.

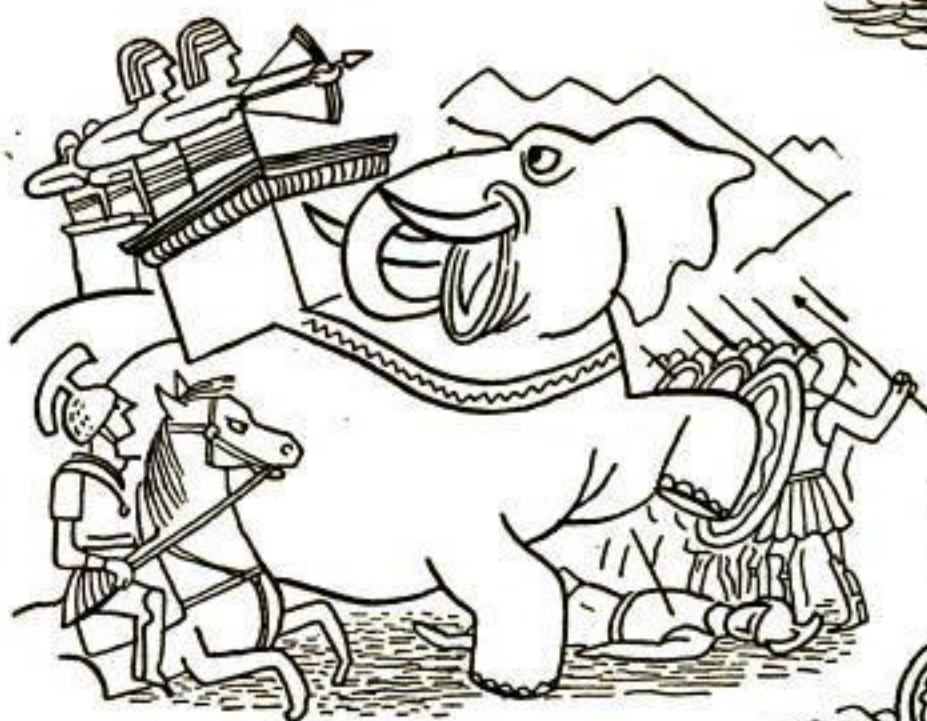

The drawings on these pages give the Toynbeean view of Hellenic civilization's six stages. Its genesis was in wandering bands of barbarian warriors, among them the Achaeans, who fought on the site and around the edges of the collapsing Minoan civilization of Crete. One of their fights was with Egypt (1), another with Troy. Epic songs such as Homer's are characteristic of the "heroic age" in which a civilization is born.

The first challenge to which the Greeks responded was "chaos." This was represented by the sea, the barren land and the Minoan disintegration. They responded to this challenge by taking to agriculture in the lowlands and building city-states as a protection against highland raiders (2). As their population expanded and their food supply did not they took to the sea again (3), colonizing lands as far away as Sicily and North Africa. When neighboring Persia tried to conquer Greece, the Greeks defeated them at Marathon (4). Meanwhile (5) the distant little kingdom of the Etruscans was becoming the Roman Republic, centering on the city founded in legend by the wolf-suckling Romulus and Remus.

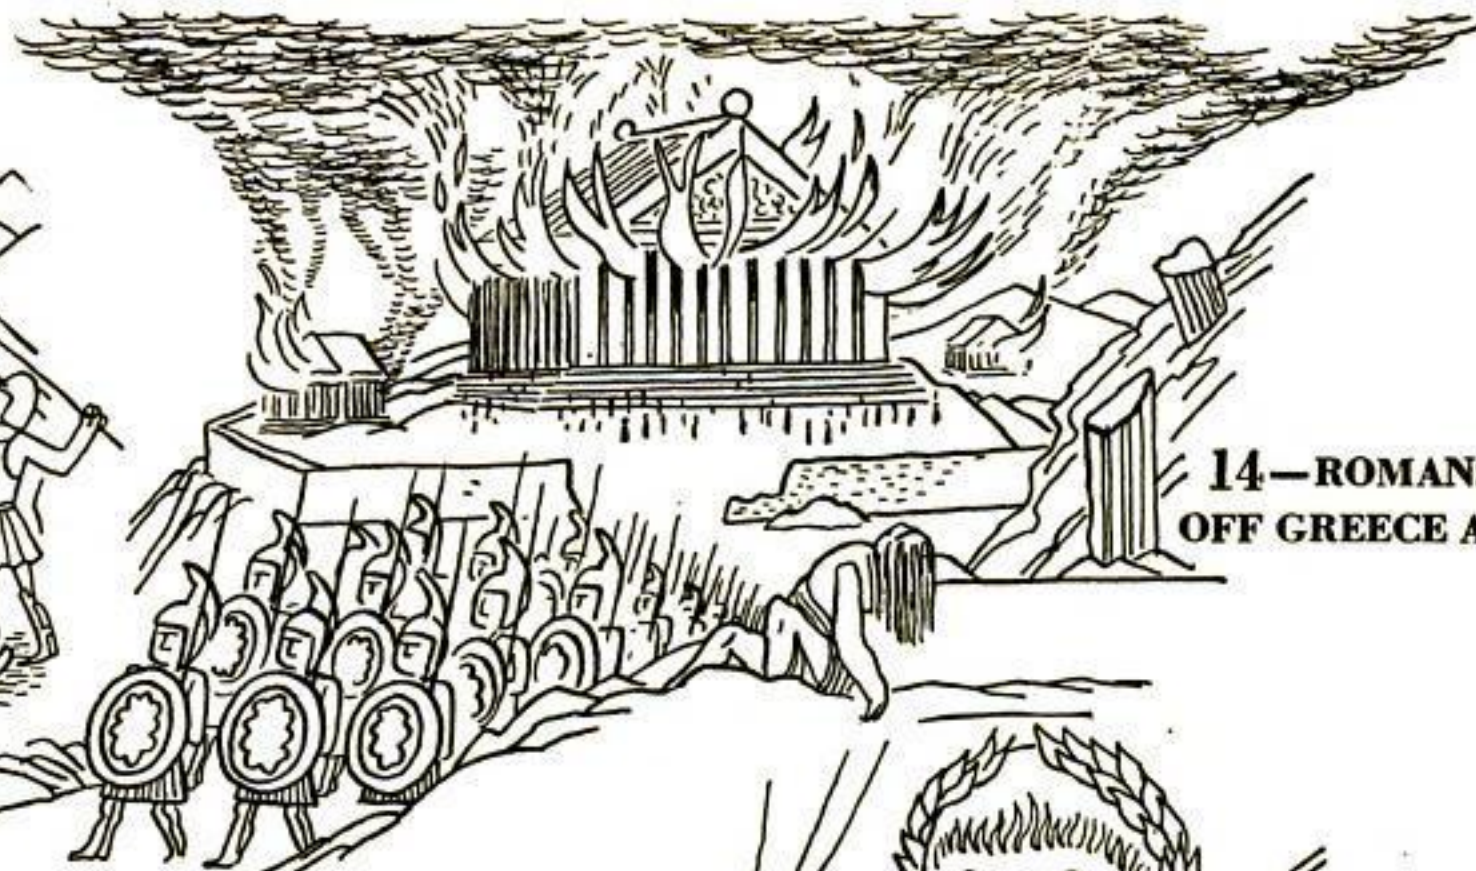

The Athenians found another response to the challenge of overpopulation: they began to specialize in goods for export and led an expansion of international trade. This proved "the education of Hellas" and marked Greece's great age, which was distinguished by Pericles (6). The Acropolis (7) was built, and Socrates taught Athenian youth (8). Yet only a few years later came the breakdown of Greece. Specialized trade had raised a new challenge. Fierce trade competition had led to piracy and raids by one city on the commerce of another. The response to this challenge should have been an all-Hellenic league. Instead the Peloponnesian War came (9) and at this point, in Toynbee's view, the civilization was doomed.

Then began the Hellenic Time of Troubles. Aristotle (10), Alexander the Great (11), Archimedes (12) were all evidence that great thinkers and great warriors could not reverse a Time of Troubles once it started. The scene of troubles shifted to Rome, whose war with Hannibal (13) was a symptom of the same disease. Now a Universal State was in the making, preluded by Rome's "knockout blow" against Greek independence in the annihilation of Corinth (14) and by Caesar's attempt to bring peace after crossing the Rubicon in 49 B.C. (15). Anthony might have performed Caesar's task had he not got involved with Cleopatra (16). This is cited by Toynbee as a case of "truancy," marking the "schism in the soul" characteristic of declining civilizations. Augustus (17) in 31 B.C. brought about the Universal State which kept peace.

As Hellenic civilization disintegrated its proletariat "seceded" and took up an alien religion. The latter was provided by Syriac civilization (policed by Rome), in which Christ was crucified (18) in 33 A.D. Though the Roman Empire did not reach its greatest physical extent (19) until the reign of Trajan from 98 to 117 A.D., Hellenic civilization was already badly stricken. In 260 the Persians took Emperor Valerian prisoner (20). When Constantine decreed toleration of Christianity in 313 (21), the new religion became "a Universal Church." With the Gothic victory at Adrianople (22) and the sacking of Rome (23) began the Interregnum, the final stage of dissolution. In 496 A.D. the Frankish King Clovis was baptized (24) and presently Western civilization was born from the Hellenic ruins.

IN GLACIAL AGE, when ice covered much of Europe, North Africa was pleasant savanna inhabited by game and hunters. Nile swamps were uninhabited.

CHALLENGE AND RESPONSE

These before-and-after maps show how Toynbee's theory of Challenge-and-Response worked out in the founding of Egyptiac civilization. When a change in climate changed Africa's grassy plain into what is now the desert, the hunters in this area had three choices: 1) They could stay in North Africa; those who did this became nomadic herdsman. 2) They could follow the rains and the game south; those who did are still primitive hunters. 3) They could change both habitat and way of life. Some did this by breaking into the Nile swamplands and learning to dike and cultivate this fertile valley, thus founding Egyptiac civilization.

The challenge which the Egyptians met is called by Toynbee the stimulus of hard countries. He lists four other major challenges or stimuli: the stimulus of new ground, which Orthodox missionaries found in the forests of western Russia and answered by creating the Russian Orthodox Christian civilization; the stimulus of blows, which the Hellenic world felt in its wars with Persia and answered with the Periclean age; the stimulus of pressures, which India is now sustaining from Western society and is answering by producing a series of great Indian leaders; the stimulus of penalizations, which slaves of the Romans answered by the astonishing religious penetration which was the beginning of Western Christendom.

CLIMATE CHANGED after Europe's ice retreated thousands of years ago. North Africa became a desert. Inhabitants moved to Nile Valley and jungles.

THE ARRESTED CIVILIZATIONS

When a challenge to a society is too severe for best results, it is sometimes nevertheless met by what Toynbee calls a tour de force. "But though the gesture is magnificent," he says, further progress is impossible and the civilization becomes arrested. The Polynesians crossed a thousand miles of ocean in open canoes but then they were through. The Eskimos' feat of staying alive in the Arctic leaves them energy for nothing else. Below: Toynbee's arrested civilizations.

SPARTANS, forced to subjugate aliens to get enough food, became such efficient militarists after 620 B.C. that they could do nothing but fight.

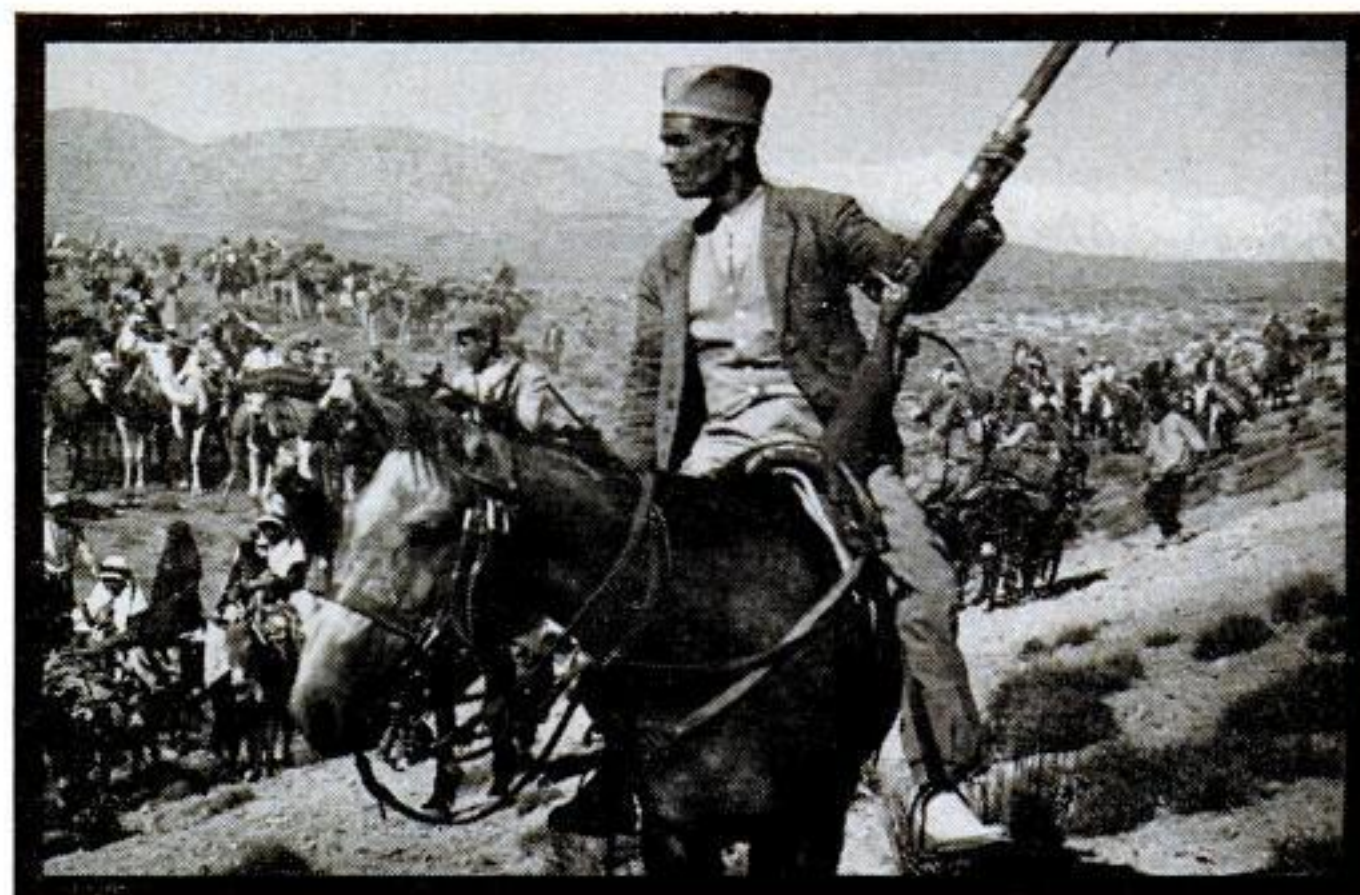

OTTOMANS became the rulers of Christian Asia Minor. They spent their energies being rulers, had none left to withstand pressure of West.

POLYNESIANS conquered the Pacific Ocean, crossed it to erect statues on Easter Island (above). But with this overwhelming effort progress stopped.

ESKIMOS adapted themselves wonderfully to Arctic weather in order to get food in summer and winter. But all they achieved was equilibrium.

NOMADS must wander with their animals in conformity with cycles of climate and plant growth or else they will starve. Although nomads (above: Qashqai of Persia) are successful at this difficult way of life, they cannot compete with other societies. Now Western civilization is completing annihilation of nomads.

FOUR ABORTIVE CIVILIZATIONS

Abortive civilizations are ones which were stopped early in the game because they ran up against a stronger competitive civilization before they were fully developed. Below are four examples. One of them, the Far Western Christian civilization, was for centuries a surprising rival to Western civilization. The early Irish, instead of taking their Christianity straight like other barbarian heirs of Rome, seasoned St. Patrick's message heavily with their local Celtic traditions, thus retaining in Irish Christian culture the magic-loving quality we recognize today. St. Bridget was as important as the Virgin. Learning and literature developed separately and faster in Ireland than on the Continent. Irish missionaries ranged as far as Iceland and the Alps. But here the Irish Christianity came into conflict with the Roman Church, and when Irish St. Columbanus dared to upbraid Pope Gregory the Great, Rome counterattacked and won a victory when a king in Britain sided with Rome at the synod of Whitby in 664. From then on the nascent Irish civilization retreated into itself, and after 800 A.D. Ireland suffered invasions by the Scandinavians and English. Had Ireland been a little less adventurous and had the Roman Church been less sure of itself, the whole development of Western society might have had an Irish cast.

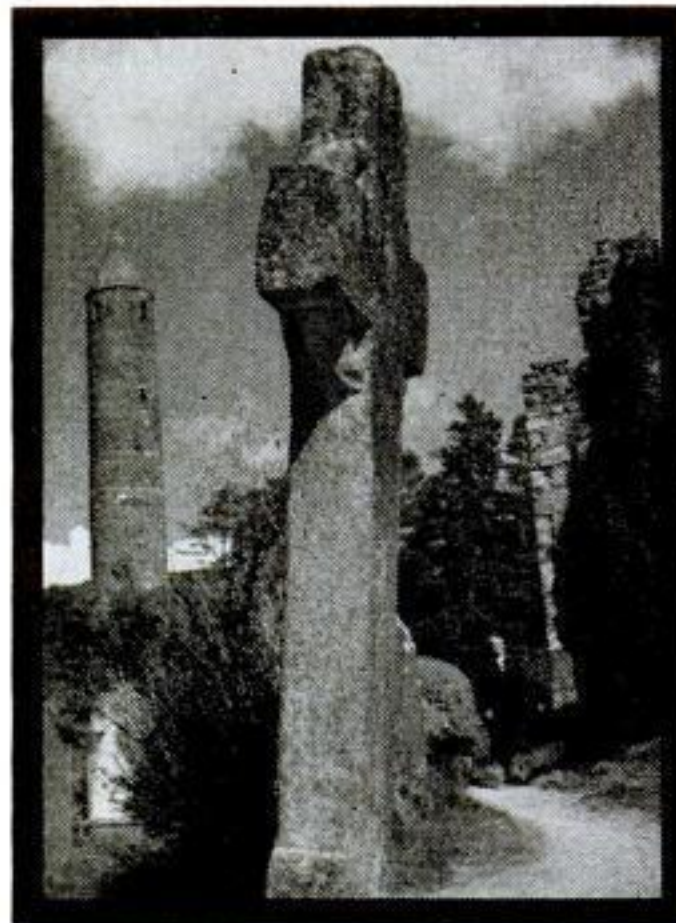

At the other side of Europe another variation on the Roman Church was starting a promising career. This was the Far Eastern Christian civilization. Banned as heretics in 431 A.D., the Nestorian Christians of the East Roman Empire began to convert peoples east of the Caspian Sea and as far away as China. Their successful society lay along strategic trade routes of central Asia. When the Arabs became strong in the Eighth Century, the embryonic Far Eastern Christian civilization had to appease Islam to protect the economic base of its life. In appeasement the Nestorians lost their identity and the Far Eastern Christian civilization proved abortive.

SYRIAC civilization aborted when the Hyksos (above), instead of settling in Syria, permitted themselves to be distracted by neighboring Egypt.

FAR EASTERN CHRISTIAN civilization was stimulated by Nestorians who fled into Asia, built this monument there, succumbed to Arabs.

FAR WESTERN CHRISTIAN civilization centered in Ireland, where the highly developed society erected these crosses in the Sixth Century.

SCANDINAVIAN civilization heard its death knell when the Icelanders adopted Christianity in 1000 A.D. Shown above is a runic stone.

STUDY OF HISTORY CONTINUED WITHDRAWAL AND RETURN

Toynbee believes in an aristocratic principle: "In all acts of social creation the creators are either creative individuals or, at most, creative minorities. . . ." He further finds that these individuals and minorities best contribute leadership by withdrawing from society a while, doping out the answer to some current challenge and then returning to society with the answer. Herein lies Toynbee's link between mysticism and the real world: "The very source and fountain-head of creation in social affairs is this non-social experience of religious or aesthetic or intellectual ecstasy which . . . 'Withdrawal-and-Return' enables rare souls to attain." The function of such a withdrawn minority or individual is, by his return, to raise "ordinary human souls to the level that has been attained by the creator himself." Some examples of the process are shown below. The biblical Moses withdrew from his people, went up onto Sinai and brought back to the children of Israel the Ten Commandments. Nations can also practice Withdrawal-and-Return. England virtually withdrew from the Continental wars after the defeat of the Spanish Armada and gradually worked out for the West the problem of representative government by developing the "mother of parliaments."

Men who return influence society through the process of mimesis—imitation by the people. In a primitive or a static society, mimesis becomes mechanical and deadening, turning people to admiration of the past. But mimesis can advance a society when creative personalities, through the process of Withdrawal-and-Return, come back to cut through, as Economist Bagehot says, "the cake of custom."

BUDDHA, born into a life of wealth, withdrew from it for seven years, returned to preach a doctrine of selflessness which millions now follow.

CAESAR was away from Rome in Gaul for nine years. He changed from a politician to a statesman. He died trying to convert anarchy to peace.

DANTE withdrew from Florence as an exile. Toynbee counts Divine Comedy as his return to—and great influence on—the whole Western world.

PETER THE GREAT withdrew from Russia for tour of Western Europe, on his return began to make backward Russia a modern state.

YIN AND YANG are represented symbolically in this Chinese silk which shows Yin, the passive state, as dark areas, and Yang, the dynamic state, as light.

FUTURE OF THE WEST

All of Toynbee's themes have a one-two rhythm: Challenge-and-Response, Withdrawal-and-Return, Rout-and-Rally, etc. This mystic duality has its earliest inspiration in the ancient Chinese notion of Yin and Yang, the static-and-dynamic, negative-and-positive, dark-and-light, female-and-male principles which together make up the "Great Monad" ("T'ai Chi"), or "source of existence." Toynbee detects in this Yin-Yang rhythm the song of creation. The greatest creative act of all, he feels, was when subman became primitively human some 300,000 years ago. The exhaustion caused by this effort left man panting on the ledge in a Yin state for 98% of the time since. Then, less than 10,000 years ago, with the beginnings of the first civilizations, Yin became the active Yang state. The alternation is echoed on lesser time scales in all creative processes. But this rhythm is not, in Toynbee's view, a mere "vain repetition," for each revolution of the wheel or of the wheels within wheels "is carrying [the] vehicle that much nearer to its goal."

The goal, to be sure, is still some distance off. Anyone who feels that the end of the world may be at hand can comfort himself with this Toynbee calculation: if the ratio of 21 civilizations to 6,000 years of history is maintained through half the period which Sir James Jeans figures for the future habitability of the earth, mankind has 1,743 million civilizations ahead of him.

This may be cold comfort to those who are fond of our particular civilization. How much farther will Western man continue climbing before he comes to rest on a ledge or falls backward? Toynbee does not say exactly. He will measure our prospects further in the volumes on which he is to work. Sometimes he appears to believe that we are in our Time of Troubles, which may have begun with Europe's 16th Century religious wars and will not be over until somebody succeeds (where Napoleon and Hitler failed) in founding a Universal State. We are, he believes, at about the same period of our civilization as the Hellenic civilization was around 50 B.C. Many Toynbee symptoms of decay are observable in our world today, notably "the schism in the soul," which, he says, goes hand in hand with a schism in society and denotes the imminent secession of the "internal proletariat." However, our "creative minority" does not seem to have become very "dominant" as yet, which would be a symptom of decadence. Other symptoms are conspicuously missing. One of the latter is asceticism, from the scarcity of which, says Toynbee, "we may . . . perhaps draw . . . the cynical conclusion that, if our Western civilization has indeed broken down, its disintegration cannot yet be very far advanced."

At the same time Toynbee is already taking a wider look at Western civilization than the one with which he began his work back in 1922. He now sees it as part of a great world society. In a forthcoming volume of essays (Civilization on Trial) he suggests that by the year 5047 A.D., after East and West have stopped reacting on each other, the whole world may be united in a single civilization through the agency of religion. He also questions his own earlier assumption that civilizations are the "intelligible field" of historical study, with religions serving as the link between one civilization and its offspring. Instead he now suggests that religion may be itself the intelligible field and that the purpose of civilizations may be to spread opportunities among men for a fuller knowledge of God.

MOVIE OF THE WEEK:

T-Men

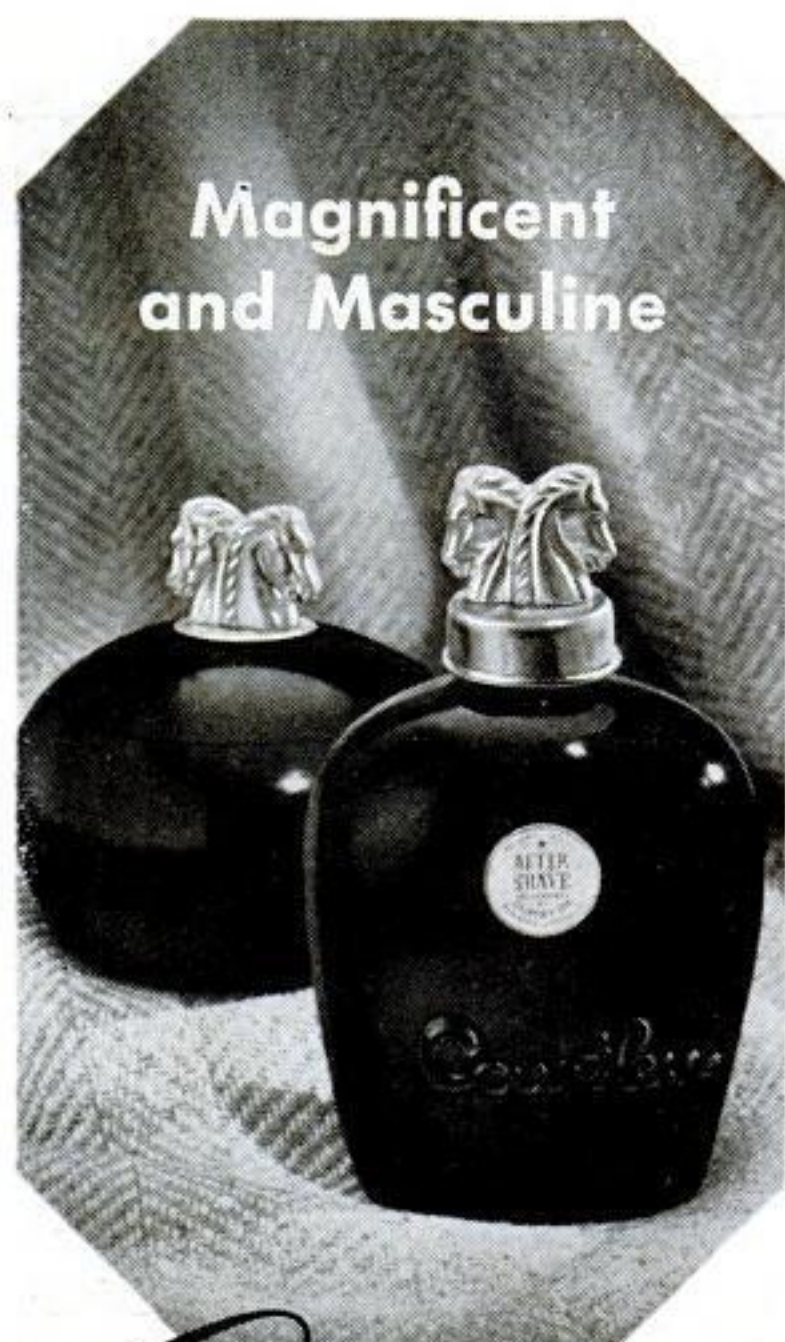

Typical "sleeper" proves a good movie can still be made without a high budget and famous stars

Nearly all of Hollywood's best movies—as well as some of its worst—contain top-rank stars and cost a lot of money. Two or three times a year, however, a picture turns up that, without either of these advantages, manages to win critical praise and reap an unexpectedly high return on its investment. Within the trade these little wonders are called "sleepers."

A current example of such a sleeper is Eagle-Lion Films' T-Men. Its final production bill was a slim $450,000. It has only one middle-ranking star, the breezy Dennis O'Keefe. Although T-Men adds nothing to the intellectual stature of the screen, it has its good points: some believable tough guys and a fast, well-paced plot worked out in pure movie style, i.e. with plenty of action and few words. The story, reportedly found in U.S. Treasury files, shows how two Treasury agents pose as counterfeiters to round up a big counterfeiting gang. After meeting a dyspeptic confidence man called "The Schemer" (above, left), one agent is unmasked and shot; but the other goes on to break up the counterfeiting ring singlehanded.

No phony heroics or love story clutter up this tale, which is told instead with a good deal of wry humor. Hollywood, which now has urgent need of pictures that cost less without sacrificing quality (pp. 55-61), could well take a tip from T-Men.

TWO T-MEN (Dennis O'Keefe, center, and Alfred Ryder, right), posing as counterfeiters, manage to join a counterfeiting gang in Detroit, there find a piece of clothing which leads them to the gang's headquarters in Los Angeles.

IN CRAP GAME O'Keefe meets the gang's traveling representative (Wallace Ford, second from left). O'Keefe passes a counterfeit bill provided by the Treasury in hopes Ford will ask about it, reveal the gang's operating methods.

THE SLUG is put on O'Keefe instead. Later Ford turns up again and tells O'Keefe that he thoroughly admires the artistry of the fake bill, thinks that his superiors would be interested in it and perhaps might even offer O'Keefe a job.

IN NIGHTCLUB Ford passes on O'Keefe's marked ten-spot to bosses' go-between. Wanting plate it was made from, bosses take both T-men into gang.

COUNTERFEITERS refuse to tell O'Keefe where they get their currency paper, but he learns that they will kill him once he hands over the illegal plate.

RYDER IS BETRAYED by a chance meeting with his wife. June Lockhart (left), current toast of the Broadway stage (LIFE, Nov. 24), plays this tiny role.

RYDER IS SHOT by counterfeiters as O'Keefe looks on helplessly. Ford also dies for knowing too much, but murders help O'Keefe round up the gang.

STEVE SMITH SITS BEFORE HIS PLANETARIUM MACHINE ON WHICH CONSTELLATIONS ARE TRACED. FIXTURES ON TOP EDGE OF CYLINDER PROJECT THE MILKY WAY

LIGHTED CYLINDER shows star holes punched in cardboard. Steve also projects meteors, aurora borealis.

HOMEMADE PLANETARIUM

Sixteen-year-old Massachusetts astronomer builds himself one for $10

The day he punched the last hole in the strange cardboard device shown above, Steve Smith, 16, of Northfield, Mass. made a triumphant entry in his diary: "I have the universe at my fingertips." What Steve actually had was a homemade planetarium which he built himself after having seen New York City's Hayden Planetarium, which cost more than $200,000. Steve's cardboard counterpart was put together of electrical tape, wires, homemade switches, assorted light bulbs, batteries and some odd parts. It cost Steve about $10.

The machine is a cylinder on which carefully placed perforations pick out the pattern of the constellations. A light inside the cylinder projects through these holes, throwing starlike spots of light on a darkened surface. By rotating the cylinder Steve can make the stars follow their course across his attic ceiling.

Steve got interested in stars 10 years ago when he was given a small telescope. He started observing the skies and making notes in his diary. The planetarium is the latest result of his interest. In the evenings friends come to the attic and Steve puts on a show. Soft music plays on a phonograph as the ceiling grows dark and stars come out. As they become brighter and travel across the sky, Steve talks about their names and legends. Then the sky brightens, dawn breaks and, as the sun rises over the silhouetted housetops, Steve ends the performance with a cheery "Good morning."

1. "Time to eat," says Lassie, as she sits up and begs for her Red Heart. "Wonder which flavor I'll get tonight," she thinks, "beef, fish, or cheese?" Whichever it is, Lassie will get a perfect balance of all the nutritional elements she needs to keep her mind alert, her muscles strong, her coat beautiful.

2. "Oh! So you want another trick?" asks Lassie. And so through the arms of Rudd Weatherwax, her owner-trainer, she goes merrily on her way. "I'm always ready to jump through a hoop or do most any other trick when Red Heart's waiting for me," exclaims Lassie. "It tastes like a million dollars! Yum! Yum!"

3. "Here's another good one," says Lassie. "Watch me climb a fence to get my Red Heart." Stunts like this call for perfect muscular coordination and real pep. It shows not only what a dog will do for Red Heart but what Red Heart will do for a dog.

MOVIE STAR "LASSIE" performs for her dinner

The most famous dog in the world today is Lassie, probably the only dog who has carved a career in radio as well as in the movies. Since her profession demands the utmost in stamina and coordination, it is important that Lassie be fed food that will keep her in the pink of condition. Furthermore, her food must have appetite appeal or Lassie just won't eat. As these photographs show, three-flavor Red Heart has proved to be the happy combination.

4. "No more tricks," says Lassie, as she pulls at the door to the pantry. "I want my Red Heart right NOW!" But don't fret, Lassie will put on another show for you next Sunday afternoon in "The Lassie Show" on the ABC network. After she's had her Red Heart, of course.

AH! THAT GOOD RED HEART!

5. The 3 flavors of government-inspected Red Heart . . . fed in rotation . . . will give your dog the variety he craves to keep him eating with a keen appetite. Too, the food elements are so perfectly balanced that a dog gets more nourishment, retains more, and wastes less. Lassie loves it! Your dog will, too!

● Tune in Du Pont "Cavalcade of America"—Mondays, 8 P.M. EST, NBC

Hungarian Premier is now U. S. Farmer

Ferenc Nagy, one of Washington's political exiles, works 60 hours a week to make a success at dairying

On a dairy farm in Herndon, Va., 27 miles from Washington, a mild, 45-year-old man named Ferenc Nagy puts in a brisk 60 hours of work each week. Even though he came to Herndon only four months ago, drenched with world-wide publicity, many of his neighbors have already grown so accustomed to the sight of Farmer Nagy trudging out of the barn with his milk pails (opposite) that they are startled by his former title—Premier of Hungary.

When the Communists forced Nagy out of office last June, he flew to the U.S., jobless and penniless. Soon he made enough money selling magazine articles to buy his 130-acre farm, his dairy herd and equipment, and now with the help of his family he operates at a tidy profit. Meanwhile, encouraged by scores of other European political exiles who have turned Washington into an international sanctuary (pp. 148-152), he is working on a book—The Struggle Behind the Iron Curtain—and dreams the exile's inevitable dream of going home.

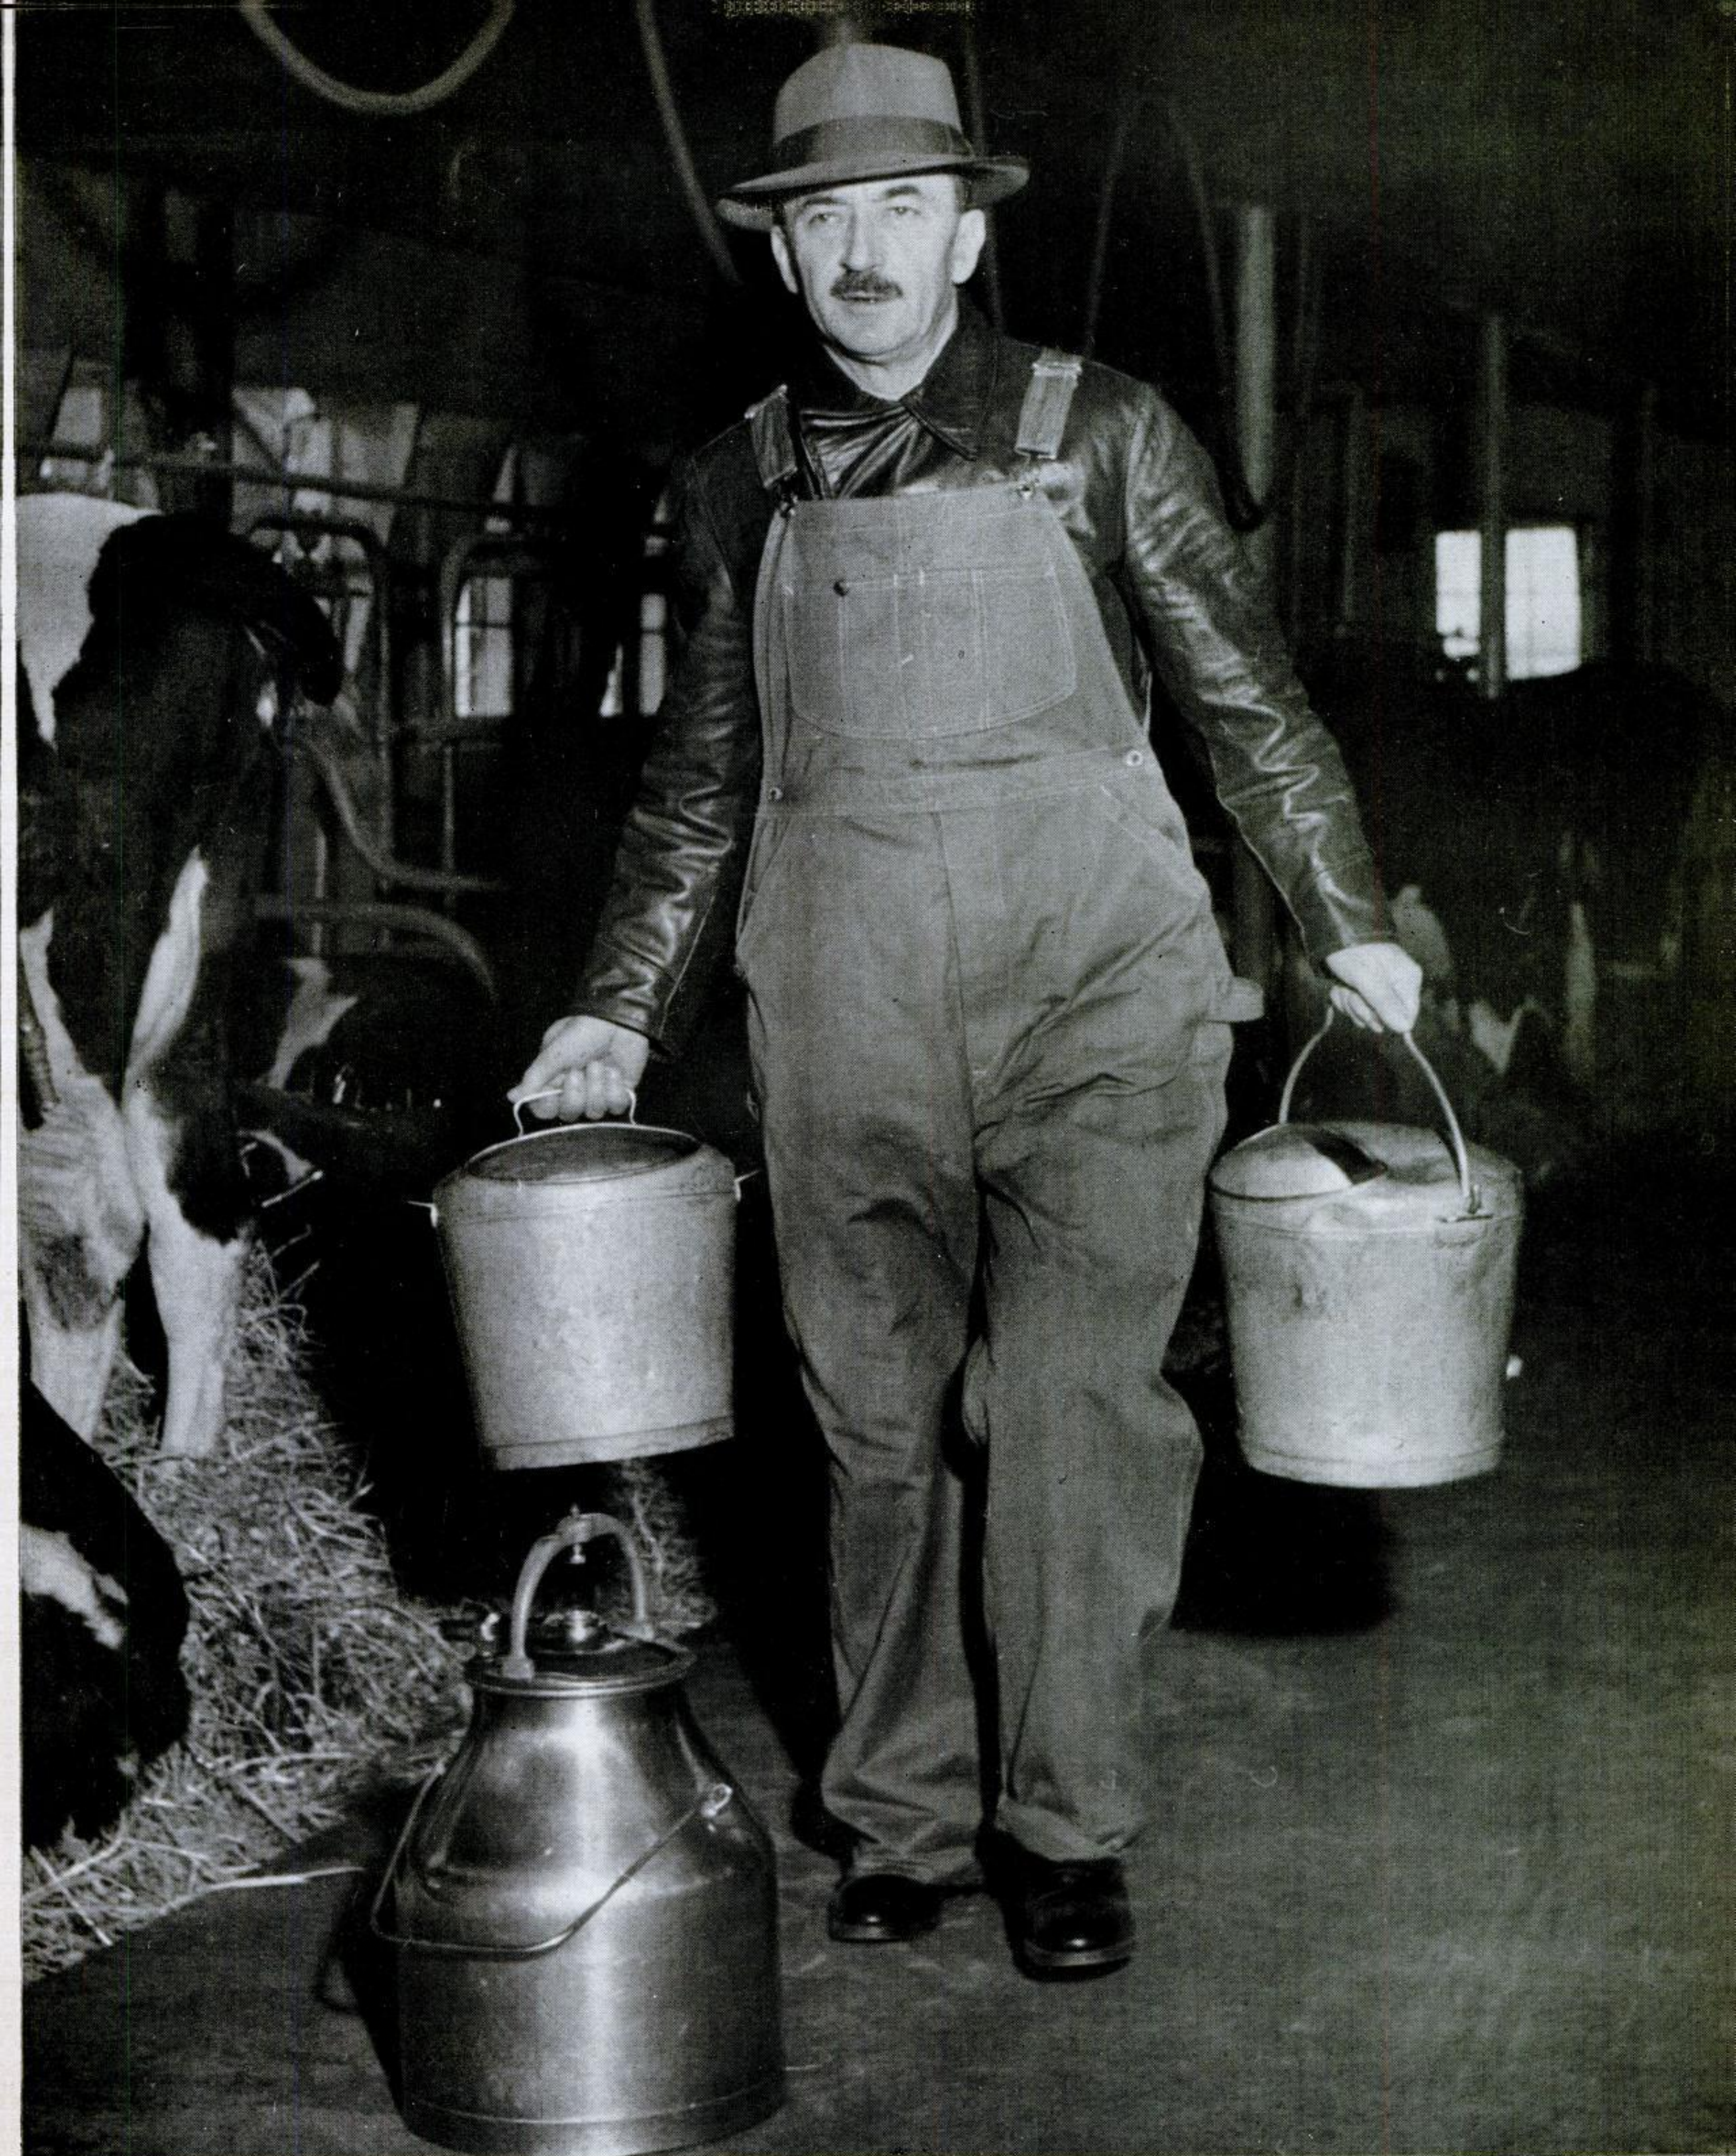

NAGY'S SONS Ferenc Jr., 22, and 5-year-old Laszlo play with American gadgets. Ferenc interprets for father.

DAUGHTER JULIA, 21, who acts as Nagy's personal secretary, also helps milk the ex-prime minister's 45 cows.

NAGY'S WIFE Julia, very proud of her collection of household appliances, cooks on her new electric range.

DAIRYMAN NAGY carries buckets of milk from his barn. Because he was a farmer in Hungary before he became premier, he now has little difficulty in supporting himself.

Some of his fellow exiles, whose entire careers were spent in diplomacy and politics, are unemployed and live on borrowed money or their gradually diminishing savings.

CROATIAN PEASANT LEADER VLADIMIR MATCHEK READS ON A PARK BENCH

WASHINGTON IS GATHERING PLACE FOR EXILES FROM MANY COUNTRIES

Many of Washington's political exiles came unmolested to the U.S. when Communists took over in their home countries. Some were forced to run for their lives. Others, already here as ministers and embassy attachés, simply did not go home when their governments changed hands. Although most have divergent political viewpoints, at least the leaders of peasant parties from Eastern Europe are united by a common interest, centered in the International Peasant Union, which they established in Washington last July 4 under several statesmen including Hungary's Nagy, Yugoslavia's former Vice Premier Vladimir Matchek (above) and Romania's Grigore Nicolescu-Buzesti. Their forces were increased last November by the arrival of ex-Vice Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk (below), leader of the Polish Peasant party, who lost little time in joining his fellow exiles in their constant, wistful maneuvering. Last week, while the U.S. and Russia traded diplomatic haymakers over the Hitler-Stalin agreement of 1939, the exiles thought things were going very well and applauded lustily from the sidelines.

Does Randolph Scott have a twin?

These are twin Randolph Scotts, all right, but they're not two different people. You're looking at the Randolph Scott dressed for two different occasions. It illustrates that being well-dressed is really simple—wearing the right clothes at the right time. Randolph Scott is one of Hollywood's many well-dressed men. On the

You don't have to be a movie star to always be well-dressed. Just choose what you wear, carefully, to suit the occasion. Then top it off with the right Stetson!

MICHAEL THOMAS CREEPS TOWARD AN ICE-CREAM CONE AND A LEMON

OH BOY, LEMONS!

Year-old boy considers them his favorite food

One day when he was 9 months old Michael Thomas Roesle was squirming on his mother's lap while she tried to serve tea to a neighbor. Inevitably Michael Thomas got his hands on a slice of lemon and popped it into his mouth. A gargantuan pucker swept across his face, wrinkling it like an old prune. But Michael Thomas manfully continued to chew. Then he reached eagerly for another slice. Now his parents, who live in Richmond, Calif., have to keep a bag of lemons handy all the time. Year-old Michael Thomas eats them by the dozen. In fact, he picks them over chocolate ice-cream cones 10 times out of 10.

Swing Shift

at an African Copper Mine

1 "I got quite a shock when I visited what I'd heard was a modern African copper mine in Namaqualand," writes Warren Morgan, an American friend of Canadian Club. "Jungle natives, in war regalia, were doing a blood-curdling dance near the mine. My Afri-kander host must have noticed the puzzled look on my face for he laughed and said, 'These men work in the mine. They are just enjoying a day off.'"

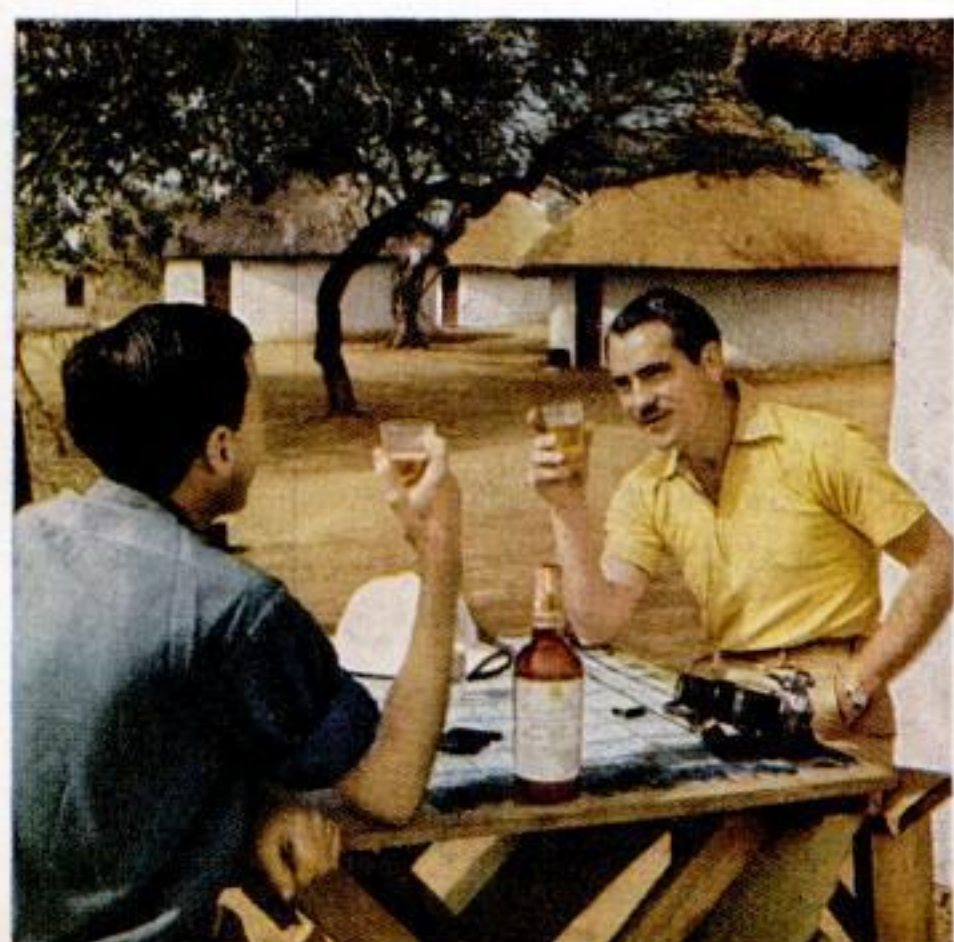

2 "The weird music from the primitive flute called an ipayipi would never rate Number One on our Hit Parade—but our music sounds just as strange to them. I played some swing records on my portable. They just stood listening with bewildered grins."

3 "The next day I went into the mines, and I found it hard to believe that the men I met were the same primitive dancers I had watched the day before. They operated pneumatic drills and electric dump trucks with all the skill of an experienced hand in Butte, Montana."

4 "The intense heat of molten slag, added to the tropical temperature, made this the hottest picture I've ever taken. Even the natives, accustomed to great heat, give the slag pit a wide berth. It's like a red hot sun working 24 hours a day."

5 "Later, I joined my friend for 'Sundowners'—a time honored custom in South Africa. As we sat on the stoep of the rondavel, I got the greatest surprise of the trip when he brought out my favorite whisky—Canadian Club. 'You must have been in the States lately,' I said pointing to the bottle. 'Not at all,' he replied. 'Canadian Club is popular down here, too.'"

6 "Almost everywhere," world travelers write, "we find Canadian Club a prized treasure." Why this world-wide popularity? Canadian Club is light as scotch, rich as rye, satisfying as bourbon. You can stay with it all evening—in cocktails before dinner and tall ones after. That's what made Canadian Club the largest selling imported whisky in the United States.
